Dumb-comedy earns money, tops drama

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Demi Moore, big movie star, vs. Chris Farley, just plain big. The magazine cover-girl in a slick star vehicle, "The Juror." The veteran of "Saturday Night Live" in ragtag slapstick, "Black Sheep."

It looked like a lopsided box-office battle, and it was. Farley beat Moore by a ticket-counter avalanche.

"Black Sheep," co-starring David Spade, thrashed "The Juror" by more than $2 million in the films' head-to-head debut weekend, and "Black Sheep" was running ahead of "The Juror" as the week progressed. The strong "Black Sheep" premiere, coupled with recent like-minded hits, is giving fresh momentum to Hollywood's "dumbedies."

The dumb-comedy chestnut goes back to the reigns of Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin, the Three Stooges and Abbott and Costello. Only recently, however, has it been elevated to new lowbrow heights.

Thanks to the popularity of "Dumb and Dumber," "Tommy Boy," "Billy Madison" and "Black Sheep," the dumbedy is one of show business' most reliable genres.

1 U D

Since imitation is the sincerest form of movie production, moviegoers during the next few months will be shelled with a variety of comedies that sometimes aim low in humor but always shoot high in profits. In the dumbedy tradition, many of the movies have at their centers the inept, the insulting and the idiotic.

The list of upcoming works includes Adam Sandler in the golf comedy "Happy Gilmore" (Feb. 16), Tom Arnold's children's film "The Stupids" (May 24), a "Brady Bunch" sequel (summer), Kelsey Grammer in the submarine farce "Down Periscope" (March 1) and a movie version of perhaps televisions most brainless show, "Beavis and Butt-head."

ss show, "Beavis and Butt-head."

Not all the upcoming comedies are buffoonish: Robin Williams'

"Birdcage" is filled with smart wit, and Steve Martin's "Sgt. Bilko" has potential. Yet the influence of "Dumb & Dumber" is profound.

Jim Carrey doesn't want to make a sequel to the 1994's blockbuster, but New Line Cinema is nonetheless trying to get a follow-up off the ground. There are also plans for "McHale's Navy" starring Arnold, Farley in "Beverly Hills Ninja" and "Love Boat: The Movie."

Some unlikely movie moths have been drawn into the dumbedy's financial flame.

Miramax Films, purveyors of the stylish "The Piano," "The Postman" and "The Crying Game," just released (quite successfully) the crass urban spoof "Don't Be a Menace to South Central While Drinking Your Juice in the Hood."

MGM, trying to rebuild its studio with a slate of ambitious and sporadically arty projects like "Richard III" and "Leaving Las Vegas," recently unveiled Pauly Shore's "Bio-Dome" and is making "Kingpin," a bowling spoof with Woody Harrelson from the writers of "Dumb & Dumber."

"Bio-Dome" was among the few dumbedies that did not rock the charts, but that doesn't mean it won't eventually land in the black.

Like many of its ilk, "Bio-Dome" cost less than $10 million, and MGM didn't have to spend much money to reach its teen-age audience: it simply bought a lot of advertising time on MTV. With strong home video sales, "Bio-Dome" could squeak out a nar-

Nearly half the production budget on "Dumb & Dumber" — $7 million — went to Carrey's salary. With other broad comedies, budgets are purposely low: If the movies look too slick, the jokes seem forced, out of place. "Animal House," after all, was hardly a glitzy Hollywood production.

a glitzy Hollywood production.

"Money is the enemy of comedy," said Bob Simonds, producer of "Billy Madison" and "Happy Gilmore." "If you get too much money, you spend it on all this other stuff, and it pollutes the jokes."

With low costs, hit comedies can be wildly profitable even if they're not among the year's top-10 releases.

"Beethoven" and "Problem Child" raked in profits, and "Dumb & Dumber" has grossed nearly $300 million worldwide. "Black Sheep" seems destined to net at least $40 million at domestic theaters. That's why Carrey is now making a staggering $20 million a movie and Farley's asking price has rocketed past $5 million.

Reviewers and many parents are not impressed with dumb comedies.

"I'm used to being attacked by critics," Simonds said. "They don't just say, 'The movie is not good.' They say, 'Please, don't see this movie. These people must be stopped.'"

For all the critical disdain, however, these lowest-common-denominator movies are harder to make than they look. Only a handful of performers are proven pratfall draws — despite their star power, Sylvester Stallone bombed in "Oscar" and "Stop! Or My Mom Will Shoot," and Arnold Schwarzenegger fizzled in "Junior." "Fresh physical comedy is very hard to do," said Lorne Michaels, who produced "Black Sheep" and "Wayne's World." "Chris Farley is a master, and David Spade supplies the verbal side."

The dumbedies aren't about social satire and rib-tickling insight. They're about getting an audience to have a good time.

"You can tell when people are enjoying themselves — they're laughing," Michaels said.

The dumbedies are particularly effective with young males. That segment of the audience is more likely to know (and care) about Farley than Demi Moore.

"There's always been an appetite for these kind of films — you can go back to Jerry Lewis and the Marx Brothers," said Barry London, the distribution chief at Paramount Pictures, the makers of "Black Sheep."

"But the audience, like in every genre, discriminates. It can tell a good movie from a bad movie."

Students protest bill on Internet

K-State students are joining a nationwide protest of a bill signed by President Clinton Thursday, which will regulate public forums online.

The Communications Decency Act will hold all forms of telecommunications accountable to "contemporary community standards."

The bill states that Internet users will be accountable for knowingly transmitting or distributing indecent material on Usernet news groups, the World Wide Web and other Internet forums.

Internet users across the United States are turning their backgrounds black on homepages of the World Wide Web for 48 hours to protest the bill.

Internet users dubbed the day "Black Thursday. Derek Bassett, junior in computer engineering, is one K-State student who changed his homepage to a black background.

"I don't think it's blatant censorship. It's more insidious," Bassett said.

"It's not just simply Internet services. It deals with all forms of telecommunications, like telephones and cable television.

He said the U.S. Senate members who wrote the bill did not understand the Internet well enough to write it.

"The problem is that it is written by people that don't completely understand how the Internet and all of the different systems work," Bassett said. As a result of the bill, some sites on the Internet may shut down. "It may cause some services to be discontinued. People don't want to be held accountable to this law," Bassett

But, Bassett said the law will not

"None of this really applies to me, to be honest. I don't see how it will affect the average user. It's simply going to be there," he said

Stanley Badger, freshman in chemical engineering, also changed his homepage to black.

"It's not only a violation of freedom of speech. Actually it's a violation of more than that," Badger said.

"It's a violation of privacy laws and First Amendment rights."

He said pornography is available on the Internet for people who look for it, but it is not easily accessible.

"It does exist but you have to hunt for the stuff with intent," Badger said. "You can't just stumble across it," he said.

He said the reason the bill was passed was to stop child molesters, but they are not the only ones who will feel

"The way it is worded is proposed to destroy all interest in the Internet," Badger said.

"The Internet is supposedly nothing more than a hang-out for the bad elements of society. Enforcement is another issue.

Badger said knowledgeable users will pull their accounts and delete information before they are caught.

"Enforcement would cost taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars," he "They will only catch people who don't know what they are doing. Violators of the Communications Decency Act will be subject to fines of $250,000 and prison terms of two years

This will include the seven dirty words, artwork that depicts nudes, and certain classic novels such as "Catcher in the Rye." The American Civil Liberties Union, backed by various civil liberties groups, said it intends to challenge the constitutionality of the bill in the courts.

One website participating in the protest is SurfWatch. It was the first company to write software to protect children from inappropriate materials on the Internet. The E-Collegian will also have a black background on the website with white lettering in support of the two-day protests. "The newspaper has an interest in

First Amendment rights, and this newspaper will protest any infringements upon those rights," Mike Marlett, editor in chief of the Collegian, said.

o get into farming," she said. "It only helps those farmers who want out of farming.

Rep. Joann Flower, R-Oskaloosa and chair of the agriculture committee, said she gathers that not everybody is satisfied with passage of the farm bill.

"I will just have to hear what the farm committee says," Flower said. "And it will take a while for the information to reach us.'

Jackie McClaskey, press secretary for Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said Brownback would like to see the farm bill come to the floor of the House as soon as they get back Feb. 26.

"The farmers need to know what the government is going to pass as a bill," McClaskey said. "The time has come and gone.

Jay Armstrong, farmer from Muscotah, said the fact that the government is providing farmers with a pay-ment even when Mother Nature is good to them is a good idea.

"Economically the old farm bill is a good program," he said. "It depends on supply management."

The new farm bill takes us away from supply management, Armstrong

'The reason we can make this change is because of the CRP," he said. "Because it takes us away from the threat of overproduction of one specif-

The problem with agriculture is farmers have always been able to produce more than the consumer wants to buy, Armstrong said. CRP is the Conservation Reserve Program, which is a contract between farmers and the government, saying that for 10 years land is not to be farmed, Armstrong said. "Is the CRP going to be renewed? This is another problem," he said. "If Congress does not renew it, then farmers will have a real problem with this farm bill." Armstrong said he thinks this farm bill will be beneficial to farmers.

"Farmers should be thankful that a bill passed. Otherwise, we would have to revert to the 1938 conditions," he

The 1938 permanent bill, in brief, lets the government provide a cushion for farmers against the downswings in the market, Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science, said.

"But it also allowed the government to control supply by telling farmers to increase or decrease a specific crop," Michie said. "And this is all voluntary if the farmer wants to receive the deficancy payment."

FDA warns doctors of faulty silicone breast implant tests

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The government warned doctors Thursday about unapproved tests for women worried about their silicone breast implants and urged the use of more traditional tests such as magnetic resonance imaging.

"There is not good scientific evidence to support these," said Steve Gutman, director of the Food and Drug Administration's division of clinical laboratory devices. "The old-fashioned way of testing is what we would recommend at this point."

The FDA has known since 1992 that some labs were selling the tests, but did not alert the public until now because their number has grown, Gutman said. The notice was published in the weekly report to the nation's doctors from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Silicone breast implants have been used in more than I million American women. But after controversy arose about their safety and women filed lawsuits against implant manufacturers, the FDA imposed a moratorium on their use except for women who need breast reconstruction.

Ailments some blame on implants range from a hardening of tissue around the breast to immunological diseases. There is no single test for illnesses related to silicone breast implants, so doctors generally rely on imaging techniques or traditional tests for immune diseases to diagnose ailments.

The FDA warned specifically against tests sold as kits to doctors to test the blood or implants of their patients. The FDA has not approved any for silicone breast disease, FDA spokeswoman Sharon Snider said.

from the band's new album. According to Redman, it's a blues song, so he called it "Blues." He asked for name recommendations. This critic would recommend "Manhattan Blues," or more to the point, "Manhappenin'."

Despite the fact that, like practically every McCain event this year, the concert did not start on time, the intimate evening was just the right length, one hour and 45 minutes, with no intermission. With the music of Redman's quintet, one hoped there would be no intermission anyway.

Having Redman here this week was such a contrast to the Count Basic Orchestra last Saturday night. It has given local audiences the chance to experience two terribly different and intensely unique assessments of jazz.

How appropriate for Redman to tour through these parts of the country since he just finished working on the soundtrack for the new Robert Altman film, "Kansas City." According to prebuzz the album, due out in a few months, is to be the must-have jazz album of the decade.

Redman is definitely the musthave jazz musician of the decade.

Possible HIV infection suspends fighter

LAS VEGAS - Tommy Morrison got the news in a crowded casino, only hours before he was to fight a comeback bout. Nevada boxing officials had suspended him, for what a source said was a positive test for the HIV virus.

The heavyweight contender and sometimes actor was in seclusion Sunday in his native Oklahoma, where he flew the night before after being suspended by the Nevada Athletic Commission.

Nevada officials refused comment on why Morrison was not allowed to fight, citing privacy laws. But a source familiar with the testing told the Associated Press that Morrison had tested positive for the virus that causes AIDS.

Morrison reportedly was supposed to be tested for HIV on Wednesday but did not take the test until Thursday. Nevada is one of only a few states that requires HIV tests for boxers.

Morrison's trainer, Tom Virgets, refused to say whether Morrison tested positive for the HIV virus. He said Morrison planned to see a doctor on Monday in Oklahoma.

"We're going to go and get retested," Virgets said. "I would say at this point in time that everything is speculation."

Morrison, who beat George Foreman in 1993 in his last fight in Nevada, was to have fought journeyman Arthur Weathers in the first of a series of fights under his new Virgets said he was scheduled to fight two weeks later in Richmond, Va., and was then going to meet a top-10 contender on the March 16 undercard of the Mike Tyson-Frank Bruno heavyweight title fight at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas.

Virgets said King had promised Morrison either a title fight or a fight with Tyson by the end of the year, for a reported purse of $4 mil-

"We were well on our way up the ladder looking to get where we wanted to be," Virgets said. "We were going to get either a Tyson fight or a fight for one of the titles."

Virgets said he went looking for Morrison on Saturday afternoon after the Nevada commission informed him of the medical suspension. He said he found the boxer in the casino of the MGM Grand and sat him down and told him the

"It's a shocking thing to hear when you're told you've been medically disqualified," Virgets said. "He wanted to know if there was anything we could do about it."

Virgets said he put Morrison on the first plane he could find to Oklahoma on Saturday night. The trainer said he and Morrison share an apartment in Tulsa and Morrison has a home in Jay, a town about 50 miles from Tulsa.

A call to Morrison's apartment Sunday got an answering machine. His mother, Diana Morrison, answered the phone at her home in Jay and said she knew little.

"I just talked to him last night. He called me from Vegas. He's doing fine," she said, adding, "we don't know anything other than what we've heard on the news."

The 27-year-old Morrison last fought Oct. 7, when he was cut and bloodied en route to being stopped in the seventh round by Lennox

A British promoter for Lewis, Panos Elizdes, said the former WBC heavyweight champion was in Jamaica and hadn't heard about Morrison's suspension.

"We'd better get our man in there (for testing)," Elizdes told the New York Daily News. "There was a lot of blood in that fight."

"I try to impress on our students that the only things you can count on is that there will be change," Marler said. "You must be constantly flexible and willing to challenge yourself with new opportunities. That is how you will be successful." New opportunities opened up for Marler in 1993 when he left the business sector to return to academia. After holding pathology and toxicology positions at numerous leading conglomerates, Marler entered the management side of business at Dow Chemical Company before returning to "The world is changing very quickly," he said. "Knowledge is changing very quickly, and universities are going to have to be very flexible and embrace change. The academic system may not look anything like this in the 21st century.

"We are going to have to face up to the fact that change is going to occur, and how we deal with change is going to be in large measure as to how successful we are in the Jack Hartman, the most successful coach in the history of K-State men's basketball, has been named interim "Athletic Director Max Urick called me the night before with the fact there might be a problem. He didn't say what the problem was, but if we didn't get it solved, would I be able to help?"

Hartman was on U.S. Highway 77 south of Herington Friday when Urick called again.

"I just turned around and came back," he said.

was being harassed by Webber. Then at 7:45 p.m., another 911 call came in from Atkins for an individual who was attempting to break into his residence. The report indicates that upon the officers' arrival, they found Webber on the floor of Atkins' home with a single gun shot wound to the chest.

Riley County EMS transported Webber to Memorial Hospital, where he later died.

"Due to patient confidentiality and that this is still under investigation, I am not authorized to release any information," said the House Supervisor at Memorial Hospital, who asked not to be identified. She did say she was not working that night and she read about the incident in the Manhattan Mercury.

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - The day after President Clinton signed the Communications Decency Act, some Web sites still featured naked women and men doing things clearly not meant for children's eyes.

The law, part of a historic bill that overhauls the nation's telecommunications, restricts indecent material from being made available to minors via the Internet. The Justice Department has agreed not to enforce the act before a Philadelphia court rules on a request for a temporary restraining order. A legal challenge also has been filed in New York.

In the interim, the small percentage of cyberspace devoted to indecent material looks little different than on Thursday, the day the bill was signed.

Pornographic sites still offer up obscene pictures, and stories of incest and rape still wait to be read on the Internet bulletin board Usenet, where a new group was formed Thursday night alt.fuck.the.communications.decen-

But some sexually oriented sites have tried to comply by setting up elaborate warning pages.

VCA On Line, for example, advertises the wares of one of the nation's larger purveyors of adult videos, and Web master Darren Roberts has gone to great lengths to announce that the site is for adults only.

The first screen offers buttons that lead straight to three big companies that sell programs allowing parents to block out objectionable material. The next page lists five statements ranging from "I am an adult, being of at least 21 years of age" to "I subscribe to the principles of the First Amendment."

To enter the VCA site proper, users must click on a button that states, "I the undersigned, under penalties of perjury, solemnly declare and affirm as follows."

But on-line legal expert Eugene Volkh at the University of California at Los Angeles, said such measures

"The whole point of the law is to protect minors against their own immaturity," he said, "so how can we trust them to agree to this?"

The measure imposes stiff penalties for violators - first offenders can be convicted of a felony, receive up to six years in prison and be fined $250,000. But it gives those who provide Internet access an out if they make good faith efforts to ensure minors cannot get at the material deemed indecent.

Critics say the law is so vague that it is difficult to determine just what falls under the definition of indecent. That presents a potentially enormous problem to companies that sell Internet access. question "The becomes, how effective do efforts to restrict access to indecent material have to be?" CompuServe spokesman William Giles said.

"Right now, there's not a lot of specific action being taken because there are a lot of uncertainties in the bill which need to be clarified - in addition to the uncertainty around what exactly is or isn't indecent."

Kathleen Cleaver, the director of legal studies at the Family Research Council in Washington D.C., said the law will make it the responsibility of each person who creates or distributes indecent matter to take good faith steps to ensure recipients are adults.

One argument is that merely by requiring credit-card authorization for accounts, on-line service providers have performed the necessary screening, said Robert Smith of the Interactive Services Association in Maryland.

"That's the approach that's followed in the pay-per-call market, where credit-card authorizations are used as a way of verifying the age of the users," Giles said.

Four days of heavy rain in Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Montana forced many to evacuate their homes, but waters have begun to recede.

Associated Press

PORTLAND. Ore. (AP) Floodwaters eased across much of the Northwest Saturday, revealing a sodden landscape of blown-out highways, wrecked homes, rock slides and a whole lot of mud.

It will take weeks to dig out, mop up and dry off.

Rain-soaked hillsides continued to slip away, and water or mudslides blocked hundreds of roads, including two big freeways out of Portland - Interstate 84 in Oregon's Columbia River Gorge and Interstate 5 in Washington.

After four days of heavy rain, clear weather and receding rivers allowed a return home for most of the estimated 30,000 people chased out by rising rivers in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and

But thousands of others remained homeless, holed up with friends or at emergency shelters.

"It looks like I'll have lots of work," said Kirk Risse, who has been staying with friends since Thursday, when the rising Tualatin River forced him from his suburban apartment complex.

The lower Columbia and Willamette rivers, already closed to recreational boaters, were closed Saturday to commercial vessels as well. Coast Guard officials said their own vessels were operating under wartime navigation rules because of runaway logs.

'They're basically torpedoes coming down the river," Coast Guard spokesman Mike Stone said.

Most rivers are expected to remain above flood stage for several days, though dropping temperatures are slowing the snow melt that had pumped small mountain streams into raging torrents.

Mud, mud and more mud was the order of the day for shovel-wielding residents and road crews.

Saturday morning, Oregon highway worker Rick Kahn was smeared with muck from his orange safety vest to his felt-lined boots. He and four others spent the night clearing a 10-foot-deep heap of mud and rocks blocking a two-lane mountain highway east of Salem.

"I've been up here 20 years, and I've never seen mud like this," backhoe operator Dan Burroughs said. "It's real soft and easy digging.

The flood, which killed at least three people in Oregon and one each in Washington and Montana, was an equalopportunity disaster, swamping rich and poor alike.

In the hills of northwest Portland, Laurie Holland embraced a neighbor and cried Saturday as she returned to her $250,000 hillside home to retrieve artwork, jewelry and clothing:

Raging runoff had undermined the foundation, but her insurance agent said

On Friday, there were more than a few dead trees in my mailbox. The mother-load had arrived.

My weekly allowance came. Daddy sends me few dollars to help in my struggle to attain a college degree. (I am 23 years old and call him Daddy. When he sends you money, you call him whatever he wants.)

Another letter from K-State also arrived. While we are looking into fees, I would like to know how much the University spends mailing me useless stuff.

But the best of the best, the one that beats all the others, the piece of mail that makes me say "yes" at the box, is my monthly issue of

Week gives opportunity to question leaders

QUICKread Leadership Week offers students a chance to ask questions of those in authority positions.

Beginning today, K-State students will have the opportunity to better educate themselves about issues ranging from state politics to the K-State football team during Mortar Board's Leadership Week.

Often times, it is easy to criticize decisions made by leaders without finding out why those decisions were made. Students should take this opportunity to question leaders, educate themselves and then make up their minds about whether actions were jus-

A calendar on page one of the Collegian lists the times and places of several speeches and a forum.

Linda Graves, the first lady of Kansas, will speak at 1:30 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall about the challenges of being a first lady.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, will speak on Tuesday about leadership.

On Wednesday, a forum at noon in the Union Courtyard will include a panel of University leaders such as Dwain Archer, director of parking services, and Jeff Peterson, student body president.

The week will conclude Thursday with a speech by football coach Bill Snyder.

These events provide an outlet for students to ask questions, share their concerns and even offer suggestions.

Breaking the law, breaking the law

I've known that word since I was very young. I learned it at the same place I was supposed to learn math and social studies - at grade school.

If I hadn't learned dirty words there, I suppose I could have gone to the public library and checked out any number of bad novels that used those words. Children are not only allowed in the adult sections of libraries, they are actually encouraged to enter these pits of

No matter how I learned these dirty words, I know them now, and I'm free to use them. My editors at the Collegian are kind enough to print my columns, even when I'm just a tad

And they are free to print them, because we have freedom of the press in this country. But now, there's a new game in town.

Because this column also appears in the E-Collegian, I have committed a crime just by using the word shit, according to the newborn Communications Decency Act that was signed into law Thursday. This law which islation that deregulated the communications industry, makes it illegal to transmit smut of any kind (including dirty words, and therefore, this column) to children. This does not just mean that transmitting smutty private e-mail to a minor is illegal. The CDA also covers any Internet transmission that is publicly available (and thus available to children), including usenet groups, ftp and gopher sites, and World Wide Web pages such as the E-Collegian. Just by using the word shit, I have potentially incurred up to $100,000 in fines, plus jail time. Hell, maybe since I've used shit three times and hell once, um, twice, I've bumped it up to multiple counts and higher

All of which is simply an attempt to convey how absurd I find this law, and (for any officers of the court who might be reading this) the contempt in which I hold it. I downloaded a copy of the bill from

CNN's web page, and I'd like to share some of the things that are now illegal:

It is illegal for web pages run by museums to continue to offer images that contain nudity (even images of masterpieces, such as Michelangelo's "David").

It is illegal to refer to nudity or breast size in a discussion on usenet. It is illegal to discuss sexual issues of any sort on open mailing lists. It is illegal to include any dirty words on a web page, as this column does. It is illegal to offer the texts of such books as "Ulysses" and "The Catcher in the Rye" on the web. "Hotwired," an on-line magazine, estimates that the bill transforms more than 50 percent of Internet users into criminals overnight, in the same way that some antidrug laws make criminals out of people who tive citizens. The Center for Democracy and Technology says that "this bill will transform the Internet overnight from the freest communications medium to the most heavily regulated medium would otherwise be law-abiding and produc-

in the United States. Even Newt Gingrich, of all people, is against the CDA, stating that it is a "clear violation of First Amendment rights. But the CDA did pass, overwhelmingly. Only 21 members of Congress voted against it. Nobody wants to be perceived as a defender of smut during an election year

And this bill is coming from a legislative body that is largely ignorant of the Internet itself. Less than half of our Congress is even connected to e-mail.

The CDA will go down when it hits the courts, I am sure. The American Civil Liberties Union has 17 lawsuits ready to go, and the Internet community, an unruly bunch at the best of times, is more or less unified in opposition to the act.

The CDA is just the legislative end of some serious Internet bashing that has begun to appear of late.

My favorite Internet bash was a recent news story about some kids who made and exploded a bomb that they got the instructions for off (gasp!) the Internet.

That story would never have been aired if those kids had, like thousands of other kids, found out how to make a bomb at their public

Come to think of it, you can get "The Catcher in the Rye" at the library, too.

FEE EDITORIAL WAS WRONG

Editor,

I read with interest and disappointment the Monday Collegian editorial "Don't feed fees to the athletic machine." I want to correct several erroneous statements made in this particular editorial.

The editorial states, "Title IX intends to make women's and men's sports equal - same equipment and supplies, number of sports, coaches,

This comes from an uninformed person. It is simply not correct. Title IX intends to make men's and women's sports equitable.

Same equipment? Not at all. Even the basketbal! that men use is not the same, size as the basketball women use, not to mention other items of equipment that are gender- and sport-

Equal number of sports? No. Title

IX seeks proportionate athletic opportunities. The proportion of athletic opportunities for men and women should be available in the same ratio as the general student population. That is why the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is adding women's crew effective July 1996. That would bring the total women's intercollegiate sports to eight, while the men's sports remain at seven.

The editorial stated, "Nothing was done for 24 years by the administra-"That isn't true.

Title IX is a part of a group of laws that deal with protecting rights of individuals in education programs or activities that receive financial assistance from the federal govern-

These laws include Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the education amendments of 1972, Section 502 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975.

For approximately 16 years, the interpretation of Title IX exempted athletics from the regulations. On March 27, 1988, the U.S. Supreme Court made a case ruling that reversed a previous ruling and included athletics (interscholastic, intramural and intercollegiate) as part of the regulations.

Since that time, K-State has made adjustments to more fully fund intercollegiate opportunities for K-State women. However, the current streams of revenue are not adequate to keep us moving toward full compliance as fast as I believe we need to

Finally, the editorial states, "In 1993-1994, the department budgeted $600,000 for 'other' expenses in the business office and actually spent $1.2 million. The category was the second largest in the budget. No one can say where that money went or what it was spent on." Hogwash! The information the Collegian chose for their commentary came from a summary form required by NCAA to use specifically for the self-study. That's not how the athletic department records

When I received a call from the editor at home, I didn't have a copy of the 1993-94 budget in front of me. So my response was general and nonspecific. I looked Monday morning and confirmed what I thought Copper Bowl expenses listed as $555,749.46.

Anyone who can read a budget can see where the money was spent. But no one I know keeps a budget at their fingertips at home.

Add the Copper Bowl expenses to the "other," and the difference is about $76,953.

It is all right here in front of my eyes, every detail of where every penny was spent. Of course we know.

STUDENT BODY APATHY

Congratulations, K-State student body and Student Senate! You have found a way to send the message that you don't care about equality for women and women's athletics.

Now, I know that isn't true for a lot of you, but that is now the image people are going to see and read about when they hear this story. With the help from Senate, this student body has succeeded in labeling itself as the most apathetic student body in the Midwest.

Last Thursday night, the Student Senate, the students' so-called voice in politics, voted down any increase in student fees that would have helped the University come into compliance with Title IX.

How many of you out there know there was an amendment to increase fees only 25 cents per credit hour? A whopping total of $3.50 per semester that would have covered almost half of the needed money for women's athletics.

Not the crazy $34 increase that you have been reading about. Nope, just $3.50. The cost of a fast-food lunch could have gone to give women the rights they have been denied.

But you don't have to worry about the $34 either, because it got voted down, too. I don't want to hear any complaints when ticket prices go up or student seating is reduced. Too Our generation is faced with lots of problems handed to us from the past. If we are going to turn our backs and say, "Sorry I can't help you. It's not my problem," every time some new problem arises, then we deserve those problems.

This student-fee increase was the perfect chance for us to show that we do care about those problems and that we were going to take responsibility for what is right.

Instead, the student body and Student Senate showed that they might care, but they don't want to have to deal with it.

Sad, really sad.

Playing the eighth-ranked team in the Big 8 is supposed to be an easy victory, especially if you are in third place. Not so in the case of the Wildcats.

The Cats were led by guard Brian Gavin with 12 points, a seasonhigh as he went 4of-4 from threepoint land. Guard Elliot Hatcher, playing with the flu, contributed 10 points.

With the win over the Cats, the Cowboys are now 2-6 in Big 8 play, but Asbury said that record is deceiving. "We've got to give Oklahoma State credit. They've been playing well for the last four or five games. They're a decent basketball team, better than their record indicates," Asbury said. The Cats finished off a tough week with the loss in Stillwater. A loss to Big 8 rival Kansas 62-72 started a three-game slide for the Cats, including a Wednesday night loss in overtime to Colorado, 63-64. But Asbury nothing to be tired about. We certainly looked tired in terms of our performance, but I'm not certain that we were tired," Asbury said. "We didn't play very well."

The Cats, now 14-8 overall and 5-5 in the Big 8, have an 11-day rest period before taking on Missouri Feb. 21 in Manhattan. Asbury and his players said they are happy with the break.

"As late as seven or eight days ago we were probably perceived as being a pretty good basketball team and right now the perception is that we are probably not," Asbury said. "I think you can get out of those funks as quick as you can get into them. We're going to go back and execute and clean some things up and get ready for Missouri."

Senior forward Tyrone Davis felt the same

"This is a great time to have 11 days off," Davis said.

Asbury doesn't want his players to start doubting themselves with the recent losses.

"We can't start doubting ourselves. It's too early in the season to start doubting ourselves," Asbury said.

Casting aside insinuations the Cats' chances of postseason play might be slipping away with the losses, Asbury focused on the positives.

"We still have a postseason contending team," he said. "We're still in the middle of a race for second. There have been a lot of positives that have taken place, and that's the way we go. We just need to get back and go to work and clean up some things.'

Forward Johnnie Williams said he agrees with Asbury the season is not yet over. "I just feel bad that we lost. just hope we come back and

Jayhawks leave Columbia with 1st Big 8 loss

COLUMBIA, Mo. - For once, nobody could criticize

Simeon Haley's hands.

Missouri's 7-foot center has had a lot of trouble bobbling the ball, but he held on to an errant pass by Jerod Haase with about five seconds to go and then hit two free throws to clinch a 77-73 victory over third-ranked Kansas

"It felt like they weren't looking where they were throwing it," said Haley, whose finish made up for six turnovers. "The ball just came to me. Wow, look what I've got."

Haase said he was trying to get the ball inside to Scot Pollard.

"I just misread it," Haase said. "It was just a poor play. There's no other about it."

The free throws, with 2.9 seconds to go, also were a bonus from Haley's usual production as a 59-percent free throw shooter.

"It was just adrenaline flowing," said Haley, who had 13 points and seven rebounds.

"I wasn't thinking about nothing. I haven't been making too many in practice."

While Haley was 3-for-4 from the line in the final 30 seconds, Kansas collapsed at the line. Kansas was 4-for-12 in the final 12:52, including four consecutive misses in a span of two seconds at the 5:58 and 5:56 marks.

Kansas was 15-for-18 in a victory over Iowa State Wednesday, but it entered the game shooting only 64 percent from the line.

Jason Sutherland scored 18 points as Missouri (15-8, 5-4) won for only the fourth time this season over a team with a winning record.

The Tigers also ended Kansas' 12-game winning streak, handed the Jayhawks their first loss in the Big 8 and raised their winning streak at the Hearnes Center to 14 in a row

"The good things are pretty difficult," Missouri coach Norm Stewart said. "But boy, they're so satisfying."

Missouri also kept Kansas from even attempting to go unbeaten in the Big 8 as the Tigers did two seasons ago.

"They were good in the first half, but in the second half they were sensational against us," Kansas coach Roy Williams said.

"They beat us offensively, beat us defensively, beat us rebounding, beat us coaching. They beat us every way you

Jacque Vaughn had 17 points and six assists for Kansas (19-2, 7-1), which had won eight of the previous 10 meetings against Missouri. The Jayhawks' only other loss this season was 75-66 to Temple on Dec. 22.

Pollard was in foul trouble much of the game and had five points and three rebounds in 21 minutes. He had 20 points and 11 rebounds against Iowa State.

"It's one of those things that has happened to me before," Pollard said. "Hopefully it'll be the last time it will happen.

Missouri has made a strong turnaround after allowing 100 points in consecutive losses to Colorado and Oklahoma last week during a stretch of four losses in five games. Forward Julian Winfield compared the progress to the team's last two big trips.

"As many miles as we had to Hawaii and Australia, add them up, and that's how far we've come," Winfield said.

Missouri was only the second team in 52 games to shoot better than 50 percent against Kansas. The Tigers made 26 of 48 shots for 54 percent.

Raef LaFrentz added 13 points and 10 rebounds for Kansas, and Paul Pierce had 11 points.

Winfield added 16 points and Kelly Thames 14, including five points in the final four minutes, for Missouri

Kansas has a history of strong second halves - Sean Pearson and Billy Thomas hit 3-pointers in a span of 36 seconds, and Pearson added a free throw to put Kansas ahead 55-49 with 12:52 left.

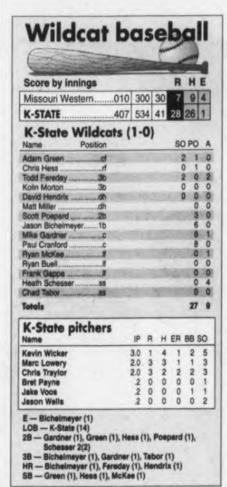

But Missouri reserve Danny Allouche answered with a 3-pointer, a layup and a steal that produced a free throw by Kendrick Moore that tied it with 10:58 to go. Five seconds later, Derek Grimm made two free throws to put Missouri ahead 57-55 for the first time since early in the Neither team led by more than four points in the first half. Kansas shot only 38 percent but outrebounded Missouri 22-14 to take a 38-36 lead.

Missouri shot 52 percent but got off nine fewer shots than the Jayhawks. Sutherland was the only scorer in double figures in the half with 12 points, including two 3pointers.

 Outscoring its opponents 42-9, the K-State baseball team comes out hitting. Collegian Staff Staying ahead of the pitchers is the key to any game in baseball, and K-State followed the rule this weekend in a twogame homestand as the Wildcats go 2-0 for the season.

In its 28-7 win over Missouri Western Friday, K-State pounded out 26 hits, and in Saturday's 14-2 thrashing of Creighton, the Cats recorded 10 hits but also drew 16 walks.

For the weekend, the Cats compiled 42 runs, 36 hits, seven home runs, and drew 24 walks

"The pitchers are behind the hitters right now, and the teams we played this weekend hadn't been outside that much, so the fact we'd been out for a week kind of exaggerated things," Coach Mike Clark said.

For the weekend, second baseman Scott Poepard led the Cats' attack with eight hits in 12 at-bats, with right-fielder Chris Hess adding seven hits in 10 at-

In their three-hour, 25-minute rout of the Griffons Friday, the Cats scored early and often. K-State put four runs on the board in the first-inning courtesy of Todd Fereday's three-run homer to left center. They added seven runs in the third inning, which included a solo shot from Jason Bichelmeyer and a three-run blast by Dave Hendrix.

three innings to get the win, chalking up four hits, two walks, five strike-outs and one earned run. Relief pitchers Marc Lowery, Chris Traylor, Bret Payne, Jake Voos and Jason Wells combined for only three earned runs.

Against Creighton, the Cats scored three runs in the first, one in the second, and three more in each of the third and fourth innings to put the game out of reach early.

The Cats took a quick 2-0 lead in the first when Hess, after Adam Green had drawn one of his five walks for the day, blasted a home run to right center.

"I hit that ball about as well as I can," Hess said.

Two innings later, shortstop Heath Schesse welcomed Scott Sladovnik to Frank Myers Field with a wind-blown two-run homer of his own over the scoreboard in right field to put the Cats ahead

In the fourth, Poepard hit a three-run shot to right center. For the weekend, six different K-State players hit home runs.

"When their pitchers made a mistake, we made them pay for it, and that shows our experience," Clark said. "The guys are really comfortable and have a plan of attack that when the pitcher does make a mistake, we're going to hit the ball hard."

Two wins, and the opportunity to play most of the team, classified it as a successful first weekend for the Cats.

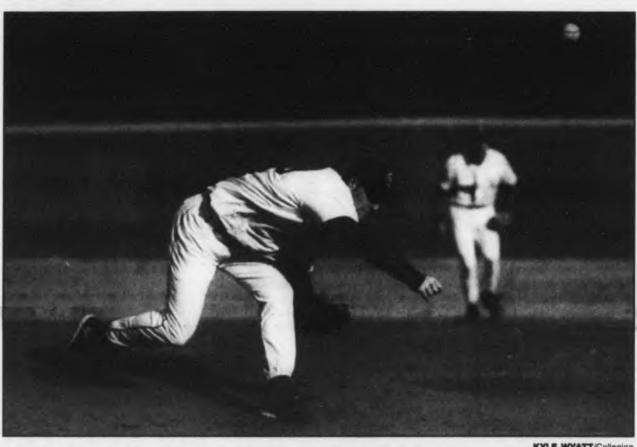

"We played good defense, the pitchers did a good job, we got a lot of kids in, we got most of the arms on the hill, and so it was a very successful weekend for us," Clark said. "And it will help us in going to the Air Force Academy. They were going to have five or six games under their belt, and it would have been our first one.

"Everything that we had team-wise, goal-wise this weekend, we accomplished."

K-State returns to action Saturday for a three-game set in Colorado Springs against the Falcons.

A new show of ceramics by Yoshiro Ikeda and Kazutaka Kanagae opened Friday night at the Strecker The focus of the show is unquestionably Kanagae's fascinating, fluid work. Kanagae's style is so fluid, you begin to question if they are exactly ceramics or plastic. His work is like a ceramic cross-over of Claes Oldenburg's early soft sculpture, only Kanagae's work is purely non-represen-

Each work is a sort of hollow cylinder gone limp a brilliantly-colored tube melted upon itself. Speaking through his wife, Fukumi, Kanagae said

ing in his work. "A straight pipe speaks nothing. To add emotion, he wants to express the softness of the clay," Fukumi said. "He wants to express the high tension of the material."

That tension is very appealing. His largest work, "Pressure I," a large, white, limp cylinder situated in three sections and supported with jutting, hard-edged red supports, is like a structural engineer's worst nightmare: a vivid example of mechanics gone awry.

Kanagae's process begins with a straight, clay cylinder. He pushes and squashes it until it assumes the form he is seeking. He said it is difficult to know when to stop applying force.

It is amazing the pieces are not cracked apart at the Kanagae, of Fakuoka, Japan, is on a one-year sabbatical in Manhattan from the Kyushu Industrial University. He was a classmate of Ikeda when they studied at Kyoto City University of Fine Art. He has given demonstrations and workshops at K-State as part of his sabbatical Ikeda has two teapots on exhibit. He said he still works in teapots at times because he gets invited to many teapot shows around the country. His other work consists of free-form expressions of nature

Although the forms may differ, Ikeda's work is consistently textural. Developed by Ikeda himself, the manganese carbonate glazing process (which separates during firing) is uniquely his.

Ikeda's work is quite distinguishable locally since he exhibits numerous times per year. He will also be awarded a $5,000 fellowship from the Kansas Arts Commission on Feb. 22.

Ikeda's influence, especially with many students at K-State, has given contemporary ceramics local importance and regional followers - which makes this show a definite must on your cultural calendar.

This is really the first show of the season to focus on artists working locally - which is, perhaps, why this show succeeds and last semester's efforts suffered.

The evening allowed residents to raise money in the name of one of their former residents, John Gaieski, said Eric Keen, junior in mechanical engineering.

John Gaieski was a resident of Goodnow Hall when he committed suicide in March 1995.

The John Gaieski Memorial Scholarship Benefit Dinner, sponsored by KSUARH, was attended by 75 people before the ball Saturday evening in the Union Flint Hills

Several people spoke at the dinner about John Gaieski and the memorial fund, including Donna Gaieski, mother of John Gaieski, Carla Jones, assistant dean of student life, and Aaron Austin, John Gaieski's former resident assistant.

Later, the Winterball was in the main ballroom of the K-State Student Union. The theme was "Evening in the Park," and the colors were forest green, gold and black, said Rene Grant, graduate student in community and regional planning.

Grant said about 500 students attended the ball.

In addition, there were carriage rides for $5 per couple with the money going to the John Gaieski memorial fund, Grant said.

NATIONAL POLITICS

Dole's farm-bill victory stirs controversy

WASHINGTON — It was classic Bob Dole working the Senate floor to not only carry a farm bill victory into the Iowa presidential caucus campaign but also to deeply embarrass rival Phil

While Gramm derided Dole as the Senate's impresario and accused him of engineering the whole thing for political advantage, in a way those abilities are exactly what Dole stresses in his stump speeches.

Voters, Dole told Iowans last week, are looking for someone with experience, somebody who knows how it works, somebody who can reach out to Democrats from time to time.

"That's what we have to do in this business," he said.

Indeed, even opponents of the maority leader from Kansas marvel at just how well he knows his business. Some of them, however, weren't very happy about this latest episode.

Sen. John McCain of Arizona, a top Gramm supporter and often an ally of Dole, told a North Dakota audience Thursday night that Dole pulled a cheap political trick.

"It was something I don't think was worthy of Bob Dole," McCain said.

The Republican farm bill, which would phase out traditional subsidies and end requirements that land be idled to control supply, was going nowhere as January slipped into February.

Farmers in Iowa and across the nation were clamoring for action as spring planting neared. Two Republican presidential candidates, Dole and Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Dick Lugar, heard those cries and decided to push hard for passage this week.

"They both had an interest in getting dential caucuses. it done for Iowa," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota.

Daschle and other Democrats were stalling, and aides said Dole was about to give in and agree to a less sweeping measure just to get something passed before Monday's GOP caucuses in

But the Democrats were having trouble holding their own ranks. Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the top Democrat on the Agriculture Committee, came to Dole and promised 10 Democratic votes to cut off debate. Leahy had come up with a compromise that retained the core of the GOP farm bill, with some extras on nutrition, trade and research.

Dole, with new life breathed into the GOP plan, needed 60 votes under Senate rules to force an end to debate. He scheduled the vote for Tuesday afternoon, a day Gramm was out of town to campaign for the Louisiana presi-

A Republican aide who spoke on condition of anonymity said Dole, sensing a chance to embarrass Gramm, issued orders to every Republican to vote in favor of ending debate.

"He just hammered these guys," the aide said.

Another aide said he held back two GOP votes — Sens. Judd Gregg of New Hampshire and Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania - to make sure the total would reach exactly 59 total votes. When 11 Democrats, instead of 10, voted to shut off debate, Gregg and Santorum joined the 46 Republicans who had already voted to get the magic number.

When the vote was announced, Dole was beaming, even though he'd come up one vote short.

"It was a setup to nail Phil Gramm," the second GOP aide said. "You have to hand it to Senator Dole. He knows how to pull the levers in the Senate."

A Dole aide, again speaking only if his name wasn't used, disputed that. saying in essence it was just luck.

"He knew it was going to be close. But they never schedule things just because Gramm's out of town. Gramm's always out of town," he said.

But Dole wasn't done. Despite the one-vote loss, he immediately announced it was clear the Republicans would eventually force the bill to a vote. Dole rejected Daschle's entreaties

Jackson captures scenes of poverty

 Singer joined Spike Lee to produce controversial video

Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil -Michael Jackson descended in a helicopter Sunday into one of Brazil's most miserable slums and filmed scenes of a music video that has drawn praise from the city's poor and the ire of civic leaders.

Jackson strolled through the alleys of the hilltop Dona Marta slum, talked with residents and hugged babies while filmmakers shot footage for the video of "They Don't Care About Us."

Director Spike Lee filmed for six hours, taking shots of Dona Marta's jumble of shacks, raw sewage running down hillsides and toddlers bathing in the filthy

The footage from Dona Marta will provide two or three scenes for the video, which also includes scenes of another Brazilian city and the tough New York neighborhood of the Bronx.

"It was a tough day of work. I'm glad we could forget politics for a while," said Lee, who appeared uncomfortable under the hot sun.

Brazilian politicians, including soccer great Pele - now sports minister - have said the filming would give Rio a bad image and might hurt its chances of playing host to the 2004 Olympics.

State officials briefly won a court order blocking the filming, but the judge changed his mind Wednesday.

Thousands of Dona Marta residents were overjoyed that the filming was allowed to go forward. They had spent days sprucing up the slum for the pop star's arrival.

"This place will never be the same again," said Lucia Polano, 17. "They said horrible things about Jackson, but he proved to us that he cares about our suffering. City officials never come up here to check it out."

Jose Luis de Oliveira, 30, president of the Dona Marta Residents Association, said Jackson's visit will help inform the world about the poverty in Brazil. "His visit here makes a world of difference,"

Dona Marta, one of the 600 slums where one-fifth of Rio's 6 million residents live, doesn't even exist on official city maps.

The slums reflect a steep inequality of income in Brazil. A 1995 World Bank report said the poorest 20 percent of Brazilians has 2 percent of the nation's wealth, while the top 10 percent has 51 percent.

Rio officials, who are battling high crime and widespread poverty to promote their city as a tourist paradise, didn't want the publicity.

Ronaldo Cezar Coelho, the Rio de Janeiro state secretary of industry, commerce and tourism, called Jackson's video "commercial exploitation of misery that could stigmatize Rio."

"We have to defend what is ours," said Pele, a Jackson fan. "Anything that can denigrate the image of Brazil should not be shown.'

Lee was baffled.

"What do Rio authorities think, that it's a secret there's poverty in Brazil?" he said in an interview with Rio's Jornal do Brasil news-

Producers hired 50 Dona Marta residents at $70 each to protect Lee and Jackson, along with the security provided by 80 police officers. The crew rented eight shacks for Jackson's dressing room, offices and storage.

Jackson arrived in Rio Saturday wearing a hospital mask to protect himself from an epidemic of conjunctivitis, which causes eye swelling. He did not wear it

Morrison was paid $2.1 million for his sixth-round loss to Lewis, a fight that could have led to his first title shot since he lost the WBO heavyweight crown to Michael Bentt in October 1993. He is 45-3-1 in a seven-year career with 39 knockouts. including a 12-round decision over Foreman in 1993 for the WBO title.

Morrison was a popular attraction in the heavyweight ranks, with a strong following drawn by his blond good looks and punching power that sometimes disguised a weak chin.

The crowd of about 5,000 at the MGM Grand Saturday night booed when told Morrison would not fight in the semi-main event on the Felix Trinidad-Rodney Moore IBF welterweight title fight.

"I don't think 10 people were there to see Felix Trinidad," Virgets said. "Tommy has always had a following. Not only because he's white, but he is charismatic and articulate."

In addition to his boxing career, Morrison was an actor who played a featured part as a boxer trained by Sylvester Stallone in "Rocky V."

He most recently had a guest role last month on the "Cybill" show, where he also played a boxer.

Marc Ratner, executive director of the Nevada Athletic Commission, said he was under orders from Nevada Attorney General Frankie Sue Del Papa not to disclose the reason for Morrison's medical suspen-

Ratner said Morrison underwent a prefight physical on Friday along with other fighters on the card and took the HIV test the previous day.

He said Nevada sometimes tests fighters for drugs prior to fights if they have previous drug problems but did not test Morrison.

"To the best of my knowledge he had no (previous) problems," Ratner

Morrison also faces misdemeanor charges in Oklahoma stemming from an October incident in which Tammy Witt, the mother of his 5-year-old son, alleged that he hit her.

Only one boxer has testified positive for the HIV virus in Nevada since the state first started testing for the virus in the late 1980s.

That was in 1991 when a junior featherweight undercard fighter tested positive and was suspended indefinitely by the commission.

the house was not covered for flood damage, and a city engineer said the home, on the edge of a bluff, could not be salvaged.

"This was really a dream house for me," she said. "I don't know what I'm going to do."

In Lake Oswego south of Portland, where the homes range from $500,000 to more than $2 million, many lakeside homeowners said they had no flood insurance.

"We were told there is no problem," Katherine Frandsen said Friday night as she piled sandbags against her doors.

About 250 homes were flooded there as the Tualatin River, emptying into the lake, crested Saturday morning. Downtown streets in the neighboring town of Tualatin were at least a foot deep in muddy water.

Portland, its downtown spared when the bloated Willamette paused just inches short of the seawall's top, now faces a shortage of drinking water. Flood-muddied streams clouded the city's supply from mountain reservoirs, forcing a switch to backup wells that could meet only half of the demand.

House committee endorses qualified-admissions bill

TOPEKA — The House Education Committee Monday endorsed a bill that would establish minimum qualifications for Kansas high school graduates to enter any of the state's six universities.

The committee, after lengthy debate over a series of defeated amendment motions, sent to the House for debate a measure that would require students to meet one of three requirements:

■ Have a grade point average of 2.0 on a 4.0 scale in a college preparatory curriculum.

Pains hospitalize Hatcher

Associated Press

Further tests were scheduled today for K-State point guard Elliot Hatcher, who was hospitalized briefly in Stillwater, Okla., Sunday after complaining of chest pains.

"We're going to get him a little more thoroughly evaluated this afternoon," Wildcat coach Tom Asbury said. "I think he's OK."

Hatcher had boarded the team plane to fly home after a game against Oklahoma State when he began complaining of chest pains, Coach Tom Asbury said.

"He was really hurting," he said. Asbury was present when Loyola-Marymount player Hank Gaithers died of a heart attack during the West Coast Conference tournament.

Asbury was coach at Pepperdine at the time, and his team was getting ready to play the next game.

So when Hatcher began complaining of pain, Asbury immediately called paramedics.

They determined that Hatcher should be taken to the hospital. Asbury stayed with Hatcher while the rest of the team returned to Manhattan on a different plane.

Hatcher, who played only 21 minutes in the game against Oklahoma State, was diagnosed as having an inflammation of the chest wall. Asbury said it could have been caused by the flu, a virus or maybe a blow he suffered during the game.

Graves signs bill eliminating primary

Associated Press

TOPEKA - Gov. Bill Graves signed into law late Monday a bill canceling Kansas' presidential preference primary election for this year, then announced he is going to New Hampshire for a day of campaigning on behalf of Sen. Bob Dole.

Graves said he would fly to New Hampshire late Tuesday, spend all day Wednesday supporting Dole's bid for the Republican presidential nomination and return home

Virginia Gov. George Allen and South Carolina Gov. David Beasley campaigning for Dole in Keene and Manchester.

Graves said he assumed the foursome would appear at events arranged by Dole's campaign, but said they aren't being set up until after the campaign assesses the results of the Iowa caucuses Tuesday night.

"I just made it clear to the Dole people I'm willing to do anything needed to help the senator," Graves said.

Graves signed the bill calling off Kansas' April 2 presidential primary - a victim of its cost, timing and the likelihood that President Clinton and Dole would win it in a breeze.

"Any time I can save the state $1.4 million with the stroke of a pen," Graves said. "I am only too happy to oblige," he said.

"In this particular election year, in this state, this election would have resulted in an unwarranted expense of taxpayer money to simply ratify what's expected to be a foregone conclusion in terms of the two major party nominees." He signed the bill at Cedar Crest, the governor's residence primaries likely to settle the nomination fight. All the candidates vowed to press on, but Iowa's results were sobering to publishing heir Steve Forbes, who was a distant fourth, and may have dealt a fatal blow to Texas Sen. Phil Gramm, who ran fifth.

President Clinton was unopposed in the state's Democratic caucuses, and the bruising nature of the Republican race was a vivid reminder of Clinton's luxury.

Rivals rushed to assert that Dole's win was hardly convincing, and said he ran 10 points behind his 1988 showing here. But Dole said his was hardly a weak showing, telling a victory rally, "We withstood a barrage of millions and millions and millions of dollars of negative advertising and came out on

With 97 percent of the vote counted, Dole had 26 percent, to 23 percent for Buchanan. Alexander had 18 percent, Forbes 10 percent and Gramm 9 percent.

Buchanan closed the Iowa campaign imploring supporters of anti-abortion longshot Alan Keyes to rally to his side and will head to New Hampshire wishing he had been more successful. Keyes got 7 percent, a remarkable showing given his shoestring budget. Indiana Sen. Dick Lugar had 4 percent and plain-spoken businessman Morry Taylor 1 percent.

News organizations projected Dole's victory as the caucuses began, based on surveys of participants as they arrived at their precincts.

Buchanan said his showing was "a victory for a new idea in the Republican Party and national politics, a new spirited conservativism of the heart" he said would attract social conservatives and blue-collar workers worried about deals that send their jobs overseas.

New Hampshire is a Buchanan stronghold, the state where he got 37 percent to spark his 1992 primary run against President Bush. But Dole vowed not to stumble there this time as he did after Iowa got him off to a winning start in 1988.

▶ EPA INVESTIGATES POSSIBLE ASBESTOS-DUMPING IN KANSAS CITY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Environmental Protection Agency is investigating the alleged dumping of asbestos in a Kansas City rail yard.

Asbestos, a cancer-causing agent once used commonly in insulation, was found by city inspectors in November. It was in truckloads of debris and dirt at the Kansas City Southern rail yard.

State and city regulators say the EPA's criminal enforcement division is conducting the probe. The EPA declined to comment.

The city's Air Quality Program inspectors turned the case over to state and federal authorities.

State and federal laws regulate the proper disposal of asbestos and other hazardous materials, with penalties that include prison. A Kansas City Southern spokesman declined to comment but said the site is nearly cleaned

▶ GREENSPAN MAY SERVE AGAIN

WASHINGTON (AP) Alan Greenspan has been whispering economic advice into the ears of Republican presidents going back to Nixon, but that doesn't mean he can't be Bill Clinton's Indeed, the Democratic president appears set to nominate Greenspan for a third four-year term as Federal Reserve chairman in large part because of his Republican credentials.

The White House insisted Monday that the president had received no recommendations yet from his National Economic Council, but administration officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there were no other candidates.

Some officials had expected the Greenspan appointment last week.

But they said the announcement was delayed because of trouble filling two other vacancies on the sevenmember Fed board.

Analysts have said Greenspan has worked hard to build ties with Clinton and has provided critical support at key times such as Clinton's 1993 deficit program and the 1995 Mexican bailout and, more recently, by warning of the consequences of not raising the debt ceiling.

In addition, while Greenspan's interest rate increases have been blamed for the sluggish economy, the Fed has cut rates three times since last July, and those rate reductions should ensure an economic rebound by the time voters go to the polls in November.

PEACE IN IRELAND REMAINS SHAKY

LONDON (AP) -Hoping to prevent more killing by the Irish Republican Army, the British and Irish governments searched Monday for common ground in promoting peace talks in Northern Ireland.

Both governments spoke of a need for compromise and insisted the Sinn Fein party had no place at the bargaining table until it disavowed the bloody tactics of its IRA allies.

The IRA broke its 17month-long cease-fire last Friday with a bomb in the Docklands district of east London that killed two people, wounded 37 and caused an estimated $125 million damage.

Workers returning to the area's high-rise offices Monday were met by police roadblocks and officers carrying automatic weapons.

Irish Prime Minister John Bruton said his immediate goal is to get a statement from the IRA's ruling council that the cease-fire has been reinstated.

In September 1994, the IRA announced an end to its quarter-century armed campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland. But the peace process became deadlocked over a demand by Britain and by Protestants that the IRA start disarming before talks were held on the province's future.

EDUCATIONAL SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

New grants provide opportunities

Programs give

first-generation students educational chances

Rick Druse

staff reporter

Two new programs have been added to the Educational Support Services at K-State.

The Math and Science Initiative Project and the Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement Program received federal grants for operation in October 1995.

The program will work with 40 high school students from Topeka and from Pottawatomie, Riley, Geary and Saline counties.

said the students will be advised on academic achievement, career awareness and career exploration in the math and science field.

The program is intended for first-generation college students from low-income families. Twothirds of the students must meet both requirements, and the rest must meet only one.

K-State students will tutor the students in math and science courses. Other officials will inform the students about colleges and careers.

"What I think it will do is help a lot of high school students get to college," Boyer said.

The program will also have a summer session. The students will Lora Boyer, assistant director, live in the residence halls for six weeks. During this time they will take core-instruction classes.

> Literature composition, math up to pre-calculus, a lab science and a foreign language are the classes offered. The students will receive one-half high school elective credit for the program.

"It is very much like a summer school session," Boyer said.

Reginland McGowan, director of Upward Bound at K-State, will be the director of the program.

The Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement Program, honoring the astronaut killed in the space shuttle Challenger explosion, will help eligible K-State students become informed about graduate school.

The program is intended for low-income and first-generation college students. It will also allow for students who are under-represented in their major study, such as women and minorities.

"A lot of students excel at their grades and don't know about graduate school," Kathleen Greene, program director, said.

Greene said the program will work with 20 students, usually when they are at junior status, and help them find research projects.

The program will also help students find and visit graduate school across the nation.

-State will participate in a conference with Russian academia to support educational institutions and ecological efforts this fall.

The conference will be in September in Russia to discuss the problematic environmental similarities between Kansas and the Voronezh region in Russia, William Richter, conference chairman, said. Voronezh is a Russian city with an agricultural economy and a population of 1 million people. The conference will provide faculty with an opportunity for direct involvement with new associates and provide K-State with an opportunity to support educational institutions and ecological efforts in Russia, Richter said. The most important benefit for Russia is information and a chance to have a relationship between scientists where they can meet together, Vitaly Bitukov, Rector of Voronezh State Academy of Technology, said. "We are looking for concrete information on the environment which may be used for many of the different areas of science," he said.

Three groups from K-State, composed of faculty members, will join with other international scholars to help plan the 1996 International Ecological Congress, he said. In addition to focusing on a broad spectrum of environmental problems, the congress will provide a follow-up meeting to the '92 World Ecological Congress in Rio de Janeiro, Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said.

"We have had a sort of a growing relationship between the state of Kansas and the Voronezh region for the last few years," Elizabeth Isemann, international ecological conference coordinator and program officer for the Office of International Programs, said.

Panel hears women's stories during abortion-bill hearing

Associated Press

TOPEKA - Tear-filled, first-hand stories marked debate Monday about whether to strengthen the state's informed consent law, as women who said they regret their abortion decisions testified anonymously before a legislative panel.

The four women, identified only as "Jane Does" told the Health and Human Services Committee they would have made different choices had they been better informed.

The bill would require abortion providers to supply information on the procedure and alternatives to abortion and would require a 24-hour waiting period. Kansas has an eight-hour waiting period between the time the woman gives consent and when the abortion can be performed.

"I don't believe I based my decision to abort my baby on knowledge, but on a lack of it," said one woman in her 20s, who was 16 when she had an abortion.

Annette Hornback, one of the few women who identified herself, said when she and her husband were faced with having a third child, they decided to undergo the procedure. But while at the clinic, she said, she changed her mind.

She was quickly injected with an anesthetic anyway, and the abortion was per-

"I truly believe that given the proper information and a simple day to think it through, we would have three children alive today," she said.

The bill before the committee, sponsored by Rep. Susan Wagle, R-Wichita, is modeled after a Pennsylvania law upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. But Peggy Jarman, representing the ProChoice Action League of Wichita said the same law may not be constitutional in Kansas because some women have to drive across the state just to find an abortion clinic, unlike Pennsylvania, which has more clinics spread around the state.

If the bill passed, Jarman said, those will be endorsed.

Senate looking for a few good opinions

QUICKread

► The Student Senate committee of the campus is having a forum tonight from 8-10 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre. Students should voice their opinions about the Lafene fee.

Maybe you have attended K-State for four years and have never darkened the doorstep at Lafene Health Center.

Or maybe you're a regular customer, visiting the office with every hangnail and cold you've ever had. Either way, Student Senate's committee of the campus wants to know what you think about the upcoming vote on the Lafene fee.

Every student pays $70 per semes-ter to Lafene. This amount was reduced from $80 a semester in fall 1994, when Lafene had a $2.4 million reserve. However, this reserve was used up after the fee was reduced, causing a financial panic with Lafene officials, who say services might be cut if the fee isn't raised.

Senate might vote on the bill Thursday night, so it is imperative that students go to the forum and make their voices heard. The Lafene fee is one of the largest fees that students pay, therefore making it one of the most important.

The forum is from 8 to 10 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre. Even though this is a formal committee meeting, students are urged to attend.

Your opinion might make a difference in the final vote.

to look It strikes me that in a college setting, more than anywhere else, everyone is on the make, looking for love and hoping to find it fast. This impatience might shed some light on that meat market called Aggieville. Impatience might also explain why many tomorrow will have a really rotten Valentine's Day.

Myself, I'll no doubt be somewhere with my nose buried in one book or another, and although I won't be wearing black or bitterly scarfing down a box of chocolates, my attention span won't be what it is on any other day. After all, I invest a disgusting amount of time doing things that can all be traced to making a good impression on Mr. Right, if he should happen to come along, and I'd hate to think it was wasted time.

Take the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center, for example. I go there every day and lonely people have already worked and waited at least 18 years, and we have no boyfriends, no girlfriends, no fiances or fiancees to show for it. The clock is running.

> self with the idea of making a good first impression is not a bad thing. However, time

Don't even wring the excess sweat out of your hair. Pull out your nastiest old jeans and shirt from the bottom of the laundry basket and wear them

What statement, you ask, would forsak-ing hygiene and toilet make? It would say proudly: "I'm taking this day out of the year to not waste time worrying about finding

Do it this year because who knows? By next year, your better half might be making time demands. Have patience. On this Valentine's Day, it's OK to be unattached.

PROTESTERS NEED TO EDUCATE THEMSELVES BEFORE OTHERS

After reading the article in the Thursday Collegian on the possible rodeo protest, I was appalled. Scott Gustafson seems to think he knows a lot about animal rights and other environmental concerns. I have news for him. Watching a rodeo on TNN does not an education

And since when did animal rights become an environmental concern? Domesticated animals have extremely little to do with the environment. I am an environmentalist, naturalist and wildlife lover. I also detest animal-rights

Why? Because the public tends to lump everyone involved with wildlife and animals together into one group, just as Gustafson has

Then, when animal-rights groups do something that is publicly controversial, it gets blamed on the same lump group.

Eventually people begin to get a negative view of anything involving environmental issues. A clear line needs to be distinguished between the environment and

My real concern, though, is these activists' complete lack of common sense.

I don't know a great deal about rodeos, but I have seen enough to know I like them. They are exciting as well as potentially dangerous to the rodeo contestants. Did Direct Impact ever stop to consider the risk of injury to the humans involved in rodeos?

Gustafson also needs to examine where he is getting his information on animal abuse.

PETA is a fanatical group which, in the past, has been known to plant bombs at research facilities where animal testing is practiced.

It also distorts facts and reports only one side of the issue. This illustrates animal-rights fanatics' warped view of animal lives being more important than

What most animal-rights activists forget is that pets and livestock are not wild animals that have been exploited by humans.

The straightforward truth is that these animals have been domesticated and bred for centuries for human use.

Direct Impact is wrongfully protesting the very reason for which these animals were born. It frightens me that people like Gustafson and his group, who know absolutely nothing about so-called "environmental concerns," are going to try to "educate" others.

The first thing they need to do is get out there into the real, natural world and educate themselves. The wild kingdom is not a pretty place and as long as humans are a part of it, our own behaviors will not fit prettily into some ideal world where nothing and nobody gets hurt.

But among the majority of K-State students, the response is a yawn of indifference. A few actively oppose the event, either on the principle that if anyone gets a month, we all should have one; or they believe it is a thinly veiled, politically correct, guiltfest aimed at white people. Perhaps if these people focus on the historical aspects, they would see why this event is necessary.

Black History Month is a chance for African Americans to set the record straight. No one can deny that throughout this nation's history, blacks as a group, have gotten a raw deal, and black history has suffered alongside of those who made it.

Until about 30 years ago, black history was still being written from the slaveholder's viewpoint. That is, white historians were looking at blacks not as a collection of individuals, but as the Negro, a singular entity whose behavior was, in large part, due to a specific set of either racial or ethnic characteristics.

The paternalist saw the Negro

Slavery was portrayed by some white historians as a benevolent institution, sheltering Sambo from the evils that befell free blacks. Reconstruction was either interpreted as a bunch of Nats running amok in the South in a bloodthirsty bid for revenge, or as proof that the inferior Negro was incapable of self-government. Today, one can still find many Americans who believe these myths, probably because the stereotypes that spawned them are so much a part of our culture. Sambo, after doing time as the wide-eyed butler or Amos-and-Andy type, has evolved into many of the unflattering roles television blacks have on sitcoms today. Nat has also made a comeback in the fear-mongering about the black predators that seems to focus on the race of these criminals and not the conditions that are breeding such folks - relatively recent phenomena, like the loss of good jobs starting in the early '60s coupled with the crack epidemic

of blacks in this country can go a long way toward erasing some of these stereotypes. The past few years have seen a great number of works that examine the African experience in the New World in the same light as the European experience. That means looking at a group as a conglomeration of individuals influenced by their mutual situation, but not defined

The Negro doesn't exist and never did. Black history has always consisted of the sum of individuals, not the perceived deeds of the race.

Without a knowledge of the rich, diverse history and individual experiences and achievements of those Americans who have happened to be black, the slavemasters' stereotypes will live on. Considering that these experiences have been trivialized, misinterpreted or ignored throughout the majority of this nation's history, it is only proper we take a month each year to try to catch up.

Don't worry; you still have time to work off those

For most students, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is a convenient place to work out and socialize. Derek Walters, Rec Complex manager, said the new facility expansion is a reason why student attendance has increased at the Rec. "The expansion has created a nicer atmosphere and more of a social place to meet friends. Plus, you don't have to wait as long for the equipment because of the new machines," Walters said. Walters said 3,500 students use the Rec daily, which is 1,600 more students than last year's daily average The Rec Complex's busiest time is 3:30 to 10:30 p.m.

Walters said mornings and late nights are busier than in past years. The Rec Complex hours are 6 a,m. to midnight on weekdays, 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Saturdays and noon to midnight on Sundays. Manhattan offers other options for students who want to lose that "excess luggage" that grandma's fruit cake left behind from the holidays. When a student is looking for a program, it's important to go to the facility to see what is offered, Kristi Pottroff, owner of Manhattan Athletic Club, said. "Don'tshop over the phone.

Unfortunately, we tend to be creatures of habit and look at the facility to make sure you are getting what you're paying for. Don't just go with the cheapest rate. Go for what will meet your needs," said Pottroff, who helps train the K-State football, basketball and track teams.

Pottroff said attendance has increased at the club because of New Year's resolutions and cold weather.

The average person gains 7 pounds during the holiday eating season, Pottroff said.

"When January rolls around and people see the numbers on the scales go up, that's when they get serious about losing weight. Plus, spring break is just around the corner," she said.

Yearly memberships run $35 per month. Other services include free fitness analysis, cardiovascular testing and diet evaluations. Massages are also offered for $25

The facility offers aerobic classes, free weights, cardiovascular equipment and locker facilities.

"We strive on professionalism to give better service and more attention to our clients. It is the quality of our equipment and attention we give to customers that counts, rather than how many people we have walking through the door," Pottroff said.

Pro-Fitness in Aggieville is the newest fitness establishment in Manhattan.

Wade Phillips, manager, said about 80 people work out daily at the club.

Phillips said the club has more weights than any other private facility in the area. "We tend to be more weight-lifting oriented, so we have more males than females, but it's leveling out with new cardiovascular equipment and tanning," said Phillips. "There isn't any waiting for equipment. We have the nicest facility in town and a great staff." Pro-Fitness is offering a semester special for $85 with alimited free tanning for the first 30 days of a membership. Other memberships range from $21 for a month's membership to $199 for a year's membership. Cottonwood Racquet Club came to town in 1979. Alyce Whalen, manager, said the most popular machines are the recumbent bikes, stair-steppers and treadmills. "This equipment is so popular because everyone is getting into the fitness craze. These machines are easy ways to get your heart rate elevated," Whalen said. Cottonwood offers three indoor and outdoor tennis courts, two indoor racquetball courts, a weight and cardiovascular room, sauna, whirlpool, tennis and racquetball pro-shop and shower facilities. The building also rents out space for parties for about Whalen said the key to a successful exercise program is finding the time and an enjoyable activity.

"Find something you like that will make you sweat. Make sure it accommodates your needs and fits into your schedule. There's no one program for everyone," Whalen

Everyone can make time to exercise. They just need to say "I will do it," Whalen said.

Home-exercise equipment is becoming a hot item for people who prefer private exercising.

Daren Higerd, junior in kinesiology and practicum intern student of the LIFE program through the Department of Kinesiology, said people are buying fitness machines for various reasons.

"Some people have home equipment for convenience. Another reason why people exercise at home deals with how much confidence people have to exercise in public," Higerd said.

Consult fitness clubs in town before buying any equipment, Higerd said. By checking with fitness facilities, a person can find out what equipment has been most suc-"There's more information out there about exercise, and people are concerned with better health,"Higerd said. "They are becoming more excited about exercise, and exercise makes them feel better."

Eating in moderation is another key to losing weight. 'You don't have to cut anything out of your diet to lose weight. Just eat moderate servings. Watch what you eat and stay active no matter what," Higerd said.

Consuming enough carbohydrates and proteins is crucial. Higerd said carbohydrates are the first nutrient to burn during exercise.

When all carbohydrates are burned off, protein, which is stored in the muscles, is then used for energy, so both high-carbo foods and proteins are essential in building muscle and staying fit, Higerd said.

"Don't be afraid to start an exercise program. There's something out there for each individual. Get help. There are consultants to help you get started," Higerd said.

This week Susan Peterson

Assistant to the president on governmental relations Russell: What exactly does "assistant to the president on governmental relations" mean? Does it mean "lobbyist"? Susan: Legislative liaison is what the legislature terms me. I spend some portion of my time working with the Kansas congressional delegation in Washington (D.C.). What I do particularly as a delegate to the Kansas legislature is monitor all the bills that have any impact on or for the University. That's mainly in the area of the budget. About 40 percent of our total budget comes from the state.

You have to walk each bill all the way through the legislative process. First, you have to get a recommendation from the governor; then, you go through the legislature. Once they have agreed and passed their legislation, you go back to the governor to make sure he either signs what you want or vetoes what you don't want.

It's a constant monitoring process.

We're very diverse. There are some issues dealing with agriculture or students. Because you are a state agency, you are involved in many different areas.

Russell: How much time do you spend in Topeka?

Susan: It varies. At the beginning of the session, it's slower. At the wind-up of the session, it's every day and all day.

So, between January and May when the legislature is in session, you could say between 75 percent and 80 percent of my time is spent between here and Topeka.

Russell: Do you commute? Susan: I do commute as much as I can. Near the end, I sometimes stay because you are late, early-morning, late, early-morning — you never know what your schedule is going to be.

I come home specifically because you get in the mentality of Topeka, and you lose touch with the campus. I think it's important to keep grounded here. Russell: Is it hard to keep a portable

Susan: I have a notebook of all the information I would ever need that pertains to bills. I find I usually end up with a box in the trunk of my car. I have a briefcase that has all the legislators' phone numbers and committee assign-employees to provide information to the legislator. I go in and say, "Hey, if you don't give us this money, we're not going to offer enough class sections, and you're going to have kids on your back."

I'm not a registered lobbyist. I occasionally take a legislator to lunch, but that's half a dozen times a session. We do some entertaining with football games.

The governor issued an executive order that they cannot accept things that aren't widely available to everyone in hope the legislature might change some of their ways.

Russell: Does that greedy lobbyist culture exist in Topeka?

Susan: Oh, sure. I walked out of the building yesterday with three or four guys who were going with one of the gambling lobbyists to lunch.

I don't think it's bad, and I'll tell you why. We have a citizen legislature. That's what the state wants, and that's good. You have people who give up their jobs, who give up their usual income, who move from their home to Topeka, and we don't pay those people enough to live and to live in Topeka for those 90 days. It's an opportunity to talk to them, and I don't think that it's offensive just to take them out to lunch

Russell: In a year where there is a large turnover in the legislature, does that make your job harder? Susan: Oh, yes. We're finding that now the institutional memory of the legislature has become very short. They don't want to do it the way they used to do it. That's why we have a good opportunity to pass tuition accountability.

Russell: Are you working on qualified admissions?

Susan: Not at all. It is not a Board of Regents initiative this time. It was introduced by several legislators in the House. I've followed the debate. The supporters are trying to find more time to get it passed, and they are running into some problems.

It's a divisive issue for the system I hope doesn't pass this year for that reason. It makes enemies of people who are usually our friends.

Russell: Have you ever worked for an issue you didn't personally believe

Susan: My whole career was in government before I came to K-State. I spent eight years working in the House of Representatives. I was working for the speaker, who was Mike Hayden. He ran for governor in 1986, and I was his campaign manager.

I went to work in his office and did his legislative program, which is how I ended up back here

I am not interesting in going out to lobby for a lot of clients. The University, to me, is worth supporting and worth working for. I haven't had an issue I didn't believe in since I started working Russell: Have you ever worked on an issue that died?

Susan: Oh, yeah. It's hard. I thought the library was going to die. I was so scared it wasn't going to pass. When it did. I was so happy and so scared, I was laughing and crying at the same time. We really don't have issues, but mainly allocations from the budget. Russell: Did you have any part in Access the Future?

Susan: My argument on Access the Future is not to bring up an issue you don't support and don't argue too vehemently because someone might suspect your motives.

We don't create any issues that aren't out there. While I believe in Access, it was, I think, promoting an issue that was dead. Don't give them anything to take potshots out. If it's not coming out of Topeka, just be quiet and leave it alone. That's my philosophy.

Russell: Do campus squirrels fall under the House Bill 473 for endangered species?

Susan: You think squirrels are an dangered species? Russell: I'm just saying maybe squirrels are endangered on this campus. Susan: I'll go back to my theory no one has brought it up to me, so I will not bring it up to anybody.

The report card is out; Minutemen earn A+

Well, we're about half-way through the NBA and NCAA seasons, and you know what that It's time for our annual mid-term report cards.

Let's start with the best: Massachusetts basketball - A+. All the Minutemen have done is get off to one of the best starts ever. After Sunday's defeat against Temple, the Minutemen ran their record to 23-0 overall and 11-0 in conference play. What is even more impressive is that Massachusetts has beaten some great teams. It has captured wins against North Carolina, Kentucky and Syracuse. The Minutemen will not, however, finish the entire season undefeated.

The Minutemen will lose in the finals of the NCAA tournament to Kentucky

Chicago Bulls - A+. The Bulls have gotten off to a 42-5 start and lead their division by 11 games. There is no team in the league that could beat the Bulls in a five- or seven-game series.

Dennis Rodman - A-. Speaking of the Bulls, let's not forget the play of Rodman this season. More important than his play on the court has been his play off the court, or lack thereof. Unlike last year with the Spurs, Rodman has had no off-the-court incidents, nor has he been late for any practices.

Rodman gets knocked down to an A-minus because of his Rainbow Bright haircut.

Kentucky basketball - A. The Wildcats will lose some games along the way, but they will end up with the national title.

Iowa State - B. Tim Floyd and the Cyclones have surprised everyone in the nation this year. Although the Cyclones will stumble near the end, what they have done with the talent they have is impressive.

College of Charleston - B. Let's not forget about the small schools. Charleston has gone 20-2 overall and 12-0 in league play. This week it received six votes in the top 25 polls. Gamblers, here is your tournament sleeper.

Missouri C-. The Tigers upgraded themselves from a D with the win against the Jayhawks. This is a team that has the capability of doing some damage in the Big 8 Tournament and in the Big Dance. This is also a team that has the capability of losing to the College of Charleston.

Although the Cyclones will stumble near the end, what they have done with the talent they have is impressive.

Kansas State - C (On the verge of a D). The Cats were sitting at a solid B-grade a couple weeks ago. They have dropped to a C- because of unexcused absences at the last few games.

Kansas State women's basketball - D. It seems someone watched the movie "Blue Chips" too many times.

Wichita State Shockers - F. Coach Scott Thompson will be thrown out of Wichita faster than an Oklahoma football coach out of Norman. Well, there are always the dog tracks to look forward to in Wichita.

Simeon and Sammie Haley - F. So, Simeon got the big steal against the Jayhawks, so what? The much over-hyped Haley twins have been less than impressive this year. A Missouri columnist once said this about the Haley twins: "You know, you have to hand it to the Haley twins. No, you really have to hand it to them!"

Shawn Bradley, George Muresan, Greg Ostertag - F. These three prove the theory that any 7-footer can play in the NBA. Put some stilts on me, and I could be taking these guy's starting jobs.

The Indianapolis Colts - F-. You were one pass away from going to the Super Bowl for the first time since black high-tops were around, and you repay your coach by letting him go?

Infante didn't do a much when he coached the Packers from 1988-91, and he won't do much with the Colts.

I guess the Colts just missed having the first draft pick every year.

In high school, they were a powerful 1-2 combination. In college, they face each other from different benches.

Friday night's women's basketball game was a momentous event, not only in the fact that the winningest coach in K-State history was asked to step in for the suspended Brian Agler, but that two former Shawnee Mission South High School basketball teammates went head-to-head in battle.

K-State freshman Alli Chonko and Nebraska freshman Kate Benson entered the game with 7:48 left to play in the second half. In front of 67 Booster Club members, coaches, former teammates, friends and family and K-State leading 63-51, the two were compelled to help bring their rival teams to a victory against each other.

It was a different story last year when, as seniors, the two teamed up to lead Shawnee Mission South to a 6A State Championship

Both women said they found a bit of irony in the situation.

"It was really hard to play against her because Kate and I played really good together in high school," Chonko said. "Seeing her in the opposite uniform was kind of tough."

"I didn't like playing against Alli so much," Benson said. "I kind of wish she was still on my team, but she is doing really well. I'm proud of her."

Shawnee Mission South coach Ron Millard was all smiles upon seeing two of his former pupils playing at the Division I

'Very seldom in a coach's career do we get to have a chance to see one, let alone two, of our former team members play the Division I level. They're not varsity starters yet, but they might be as they further as players. I'm honored to come and see these girls play and to have been able to work with them for four years.

"I'm ecstatic, happy and so proud of them. They're great kids, the kind coaches dream to have. Watching them play now gets my emotions just as high as they were when I watched them play in that championship game," Millard said.

Both Chonko and Benson had exceptional high school careers. Chonko finished her high-school era breaking the school's all-time record in steals, and she finished second all-time in assists, feeding the ball mostly to Benson.

Benson is the all-time leading scorer in Shawnee Mission South history with 1800 points in 100 games.

"They were both what we called impact players," Millard said. "We used to call it the Kate and Alli show. They played together real well, and they knew each other off the court, which made it kind of special."

Among the two busloads of Kate and Alli supporters were several old teammates, many of whom said they had nothing but respect for what their friends had accomplished.

"I'm incredibly proud of them," Shawnee Mission South senior Sarah Lawton said. "I've heard from them how hard it is playing at this level, and I'm pretty proud of them. It's incredible that they have come this far, but I knew they could do

Shawnee Mission South junior Anne Sobba had high praises for her former teammates as well

"It's just great to know that they're freshmen playing at this level," Sobba said. "I see how far they've gotten, and I know if I keep working at basketball like they did, then I could possibly play at this level."

Chonko said she saw both herself and Benson as heroes to their school.

"I think maybe we have become role models to a slight degree," Chonko said. "Not many get to go on and play Division I basketball, and I think Kate and I prove to people that it can be done." As a freshman, Chonko has seen most of her playing time in mop-up efforts and in relief positions. Chonko said eventually she hoped the time would come when she would play an important role on the Cats'

"My role now is to come off the bench and do what the coach tells me to do. I'm not a tremendous scorer, and defense-wise I'm still learning the system, but I really come in and do what they want me to," she up on defense. My defense was my strength in high school, and coming here I feel like I'm behind because I'm playing against tremendous players and this is the big time now, but defense has always been my strength with my quickness and agility."

"In the future I want to come in and step

Coach Agler said he was happy with the performance Chonko had given him so far this year and said he had high hopes for her in the future.

"I know she hasn't played as much as she would have liked," Agler said.

Looking for signs from the bench, freshman Alli Chonko is having an effect on the K-State women's basketball team.

"She works extremely hard in practice, and she's somebody who improves every single day. She makes us better in practice, and I think she's going to be a good player one of these days."

"Hopefully she can develop and play at the point-guard spot and play some at the wing. She's picking up our defensive schemes real well and our philosophy. She runs good offense without the basketball and we want her to keep improving on her perimeter shooting and her offensive skills."

Morrison to fight next battle against HIV

Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. Tommy Morrison's up-and-down boxing career reached its low point Monday with the announcement that the powerful heavyweight had tested positive for the virus that causes AIDS.

promoter, Morrison's Holden, confirmed that a test administered in Las Vegas last week came back HIV positive.

"He's taken it like a champ," Holden said.

"He knows he's had a promiscuous lifestyle in the past. He's taking it better than his team (of handlers)."

Morrison, 27, did not attend the news conference. He remained in isolation at his home in the northeastern Oklahoma town of Jay, where he was providing blood samples to paramedics so further tests could be run.

He issued a statement asking people to pray for children affected by the disease because "I feel it would be selfish to ask you to say a prayer for me," he said in the statement.

"I understand that there are people concerned about me," he said. "I am

Holden said results of the latest tests are expected within 48 hours. He said Morrison still had hope that a retest would show the original test false, but the fighter has already talked about getting involved in AIDS-awareness activities.

"If it is true, I don't see us ever fighting again or ever wanting to," Holden said. "But right now we're not concerned about that.

Morrison had cited religious reasons when he initially refused to take a test for the virus in the days before his scheduled fight Saturday night against Arthur Weathers in Las Vegas. He left a doctor's office but returned the next day to submit a blood sample.

Holden said Monday he had told Morrison not to sign anything before contacting him or his attorney because of a new agreement with promoter Don King.

The Nevada Athletic Commission suspended him for medical reasons only hours before the fight. Morrison's trainer, Tom Virgets, said he told the fighter the news of his suspension Saturday afternoon in the crowded casino at the MGM Grand Morrison was to have received $50,000 to fight Weathers, the first step in a package of fights under promoter Don King that was to have led to a possible $4 million payday against Mike Tyson later this year.

Morrison is 45-3-1 in a seven-year career with 39 knockouts. His career has been marked by daunting setbacks, but he always seemed to work his way back.

A promising start to his career suffered in 1991 when, weary and teetering, Morrison was knocked out by Ray Mercer in the fifth round. Two years later, Morrison won the World Boxing Organization championship

Flu catches Elliot Hatcher off-guard, hospitalized for chest pains

Playing 88 minutes of basketball in two games must have taken its toll on senior point guard Elliot Hatcher.

Hatcher, hospitalized in Stillwater, Okla., following K-State's 60-83 loss to the Oklahoma State Cowboys, has returned to Manhattan and is being monitored by team doctors, Ben Boyle, Sports Information director, Hatcher had been ill prior to Saturday's game and only participated against the Cowboys for 21 minutes, going 3-of-5 from the field and 4-of-5 from the charity line and pulling down five rebounds.

Complaining of chest pains, Hatcher was admitted to a Stillwater hospital.

"The doctors diagnosed it as an inflammation of the chest wall," Asbury said in a statement released Monday. "It could have been brought on by a virus, the flu or a blow during the game."

Hatcher's mother, Paulette Hatcher, said she has spoken with Elliot since his hospitalization. "He's doing better, at least that's what he tells me," she said. "But he sounds great." Paulette Hatcher said doctors had explained her son's illness as a virus that turned into a flu and spread into his lungs. She also said her son had had an EKG Sunday afternoon and that everything appeared fine. Elliot underwent further tests Monday night as a precautionary measure.

Paulette Hatcher said she will join her son in Manhattan for the K-State vs. KU basketball game Feb.

Love is in the air as Valentine's Day approaches, even on the Internet. These pages were previewed using Netscape 2.0 (http://home.netscape.com).

Qpidious Amoroso (http://www.mainquad.com/qpid.html)

For those a little low on cash or just wanting to impress their sweetheart with Internet savvy, this site is for you. Here is a cool way to send Valentines via the Internet Surfers can design their own cards here free of charge. The designing is simple. Choose one of the 20plus images, add a song for fun, write a little ditty to your sweetheart, and Qpid does the rest.

Qpid then sends an e-mail message to that special someone to tell them to look at your card. For surfers using Netscape 2.0, full-animation graphics can be sent. With almost 30 songs to choose from, this is the complete multimedia card.

State Senate to review proposed speed-limit bill

Bill must be on Graves' desk by March 8, or speeds will revert to 1974 limits.

Associated Press

TOPEKA (AP) - The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee endorsed a bill that would increase speed limits on four-lane interstate highways in Kansas from 65 to 70

The measure also would raise speed limits on better two-lane highways from 55 to 65

It gives the secretary of transportation authority to designate a lower speed limit on twolanes if there are safety concerns because of condition or age of the highway.

The bill went to the Senate for debate, probably later this week.

It was amended by the Senate committee, meaning it will have to return to the House for concurrence in the amendment. If the House refuses to concur, the bill will go to a joint conference committee to try to reach a com-

The Senate committee amended the bill to provide a 10 mph buffer.

That means insurance companies would not be able to increase motorists' rates if they are ticketed for traveling less than 10 miles an hour above the posted speed limit. The House had a 5 mph buffer in its version.

The new speed limits would not include county or township roads in rural areas. The speed limits on those roads would remain the same, which is 55 mph if not posted. Some of those roads, many of which are not paved but covered with gravel, already are posted at a slower speeds.

Sen. Mike Harris, R-Wichita, attempted to amend the bill to increase the speed limit on interstates to 75 mph.

He said the interstate was designed to handle traffic at that speed.

Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, agreed, saying it makes no sense to raise the speed limit on interstates by 5 mph and on two-lane highways by 10 mph.

She said the interstates are much safer than two-lane highways.

But Sen. Lillian Papay, R-Great Bend, said a 75 mph speed limit with a 10 mile buffer means that people would travel at 85 mph. She said that is too fast.

"Everyone is going to drive where the buffer is," she said.

"The purpose of the buffer is not to encourage people to speed," Harris said. The buffer is intended to keep insurance companies from raising rates unnecessarily, he said.

"Commercial drivers will use the buffer," replied Sen. Bill Brady, D-Parsons. "That really concerns me."

Sen. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, a member of the Kansas Turnpike Authority, said the speed limit on the toll highway will be 70, not 75

The present speed limit is 65 mph on fourlane interstates in rural areas and 55 mph on two-lane highways.

The Legislature needs to send a bill to Gov. Bill Graves' desk by March 8, or the state's speed limits go back to the pre-1974 limits. Those limits were 75 mph on interstates during the daytime and 70 mph at night.

On two-lane highways, the limit was 70 during the daytime and 60 after nightfall.

► UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL

Comedian to perform interactive routine

Union Station might feel small to someone who has done television and worldwide touring, but that isn't stopping Troy

Having previously appeared on Fox's "In Living Color" and "Martin," as well as on tour with the USO, which took him to places from Croatia to Belgium, Thirdgill will perform a comedy routine Tuesday at K-State

Thirdgill was brought to K-State by Union Program Council, after members of UPC saw him perform in a showcase at the Heart of America regional conference of the National Association of Campus Activities in Denver last year, John Sandlin, UPC program adviser, said.

"He was the emcee at a showcase that we saw," said Patrick Carney, UPC president and senior in political science and history. "He hosted the showcase, introducing the other acts, and he also presented 10 to 15 minutes of his own routine. Sandlin said Thirdgill was the most entertaining comedian at the conference.

As a result, UPC decided to bring him to Also, by scheduling him in conjunction with other regional campus tour stops, Thirdgill's rate was within the eclectic entertainment committee budget, Carney said.

"It's really so rare that we're able to bring in national talent at K-State," Carney said, "so it's great that we were able to block him and get a reduced price." Besides the appealing price, Carney said he was impressed by the style of Thirdgill.

"His routine is really interactive," he said. "He's just high fun and high impact." Alison Huff, senior in sociology, said she believes Thirdgill has a broad comic

"Besides the fact that he's just hysterical, he's not at all into offensive comedy," she "Really, he's someone that just about everyone would enjoy," she said.

Thirdgill's performance will be at 8 tonight in Union Station. Admission is free.

KANSAS RIVER

House proposes higher sand-dredging costs

QUICKread

Bill would help the government control how much sand is taken from the Kansas River.

TOPEKA - The House advanced today a bill nearly doubling the fee for taking sand from Kansas rivers, with an environmentalist claiming the measure is needed to provide more information on the scope of the sand-dredging. The bill, given tentative approval, 70-40, and advanced to a final House vote Tuesday, would eliminate an exemption for the state and its local units of government and require them to pay for it just as private road builders and construction companies must now pay

It also would raise from 8 cents to 15 cents per ton the fee the state charges for the sand, considered a natural resource because rivers belong to the state.

The bill mainly applies to stretches of the Kansas River between Topeka and Kansas City, Kan., but extends to all rivers.

A bill to place a moratorium on sand-dredging on the Kansas River from east of Manhattan to west of Lawrence will be heard on Wednesday by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee, which introduced it.

Rep. Laura McClure, D-Osborne, a supporter of legislation protecting the environment, said the bill is needed because it would charge units of government for the sand it takes from rivers - giving the state a better idea of how much sand is being taken and how much the operations disrupt the rivers.

Rivers change their courses and character when their beds are disturbed, she told the House.

"We don't know how much sand is being dredged now," she

"We have got to get a handle on how much sand is being dredged out of the Kansas River in particu-

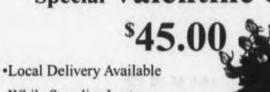

Rep. Ted Powers, R-Mulvane, led opposition to the bill, calling it a tax increase. He said requiring governmental units to pay for the sand will cost taxpayers. "A fee is like a tax," Powers

O'Neal leads East team to 129-118 victory, gets stiffed as Jordan wins MVP award

SAN ANTONIO, Texas - In the opinion of the fans, some of the players and one of the coaches, the hometown hero got stiffed.

Shaquille O'Neal, the fan favorite who attended high school in San Antonio, Texas, led the East in scoring (25 points), rebounding (11), blocked shots (2) and - of course - missed free throws (6 of 11).

He had the final emphatic dunk of the night Sunday, a monster slam that put an exclamation point on the East's 129-118 victory against the West with 40.6 seconds left.

But when Commissioner David Stern walked to center court to present the Most Valuable Player award, it was Michael Jordan who was handed the trophy.

The response was unlike any Jordan had ever heard at an All-Star

The 36,037 fans at the Alamodome let out a chorus of boos that stunned Stern, Jordan and all the other All-Stars assembled nearby. It was the loudest response of the night, positive or negative, and it put a damper on the final moments of San Antonio's All-Star weekend.

"I felt kind of strange standing out there accepting an MVP trophy when the crowd was making their own selection," Jordan said.

"They certainly responded to it.

"I was very shocked when I won. And the fans - they'll have their opinion. It easily could have been Shaq for the way he finished the game. He could have easily have been chosen MVP and obviously would have deserved it."

"I was surprised Michael got it. Penny (Hardaway) made some very big shots, said. Jordan said he was inclined to take the trophy to the locker room and hand give it to

"He can have the trophy if (not winning it) is going to make him mad the second half of the season. I might do that. I might. I think maybe that's something a young person could utilize to bring him closer to being that legendary figure that he's going to be. I certainly don't have a problem with presenting it to him."

Five minutes later, Jordan walked away from the interview table and left the trophy behind.

Good thing, too, because it would have been quite a scene having O'Neal turn it down.

"I wouldn't take it," O'Neal said. Jordan had 20 points, four rebounds and one assist in 22 minutes. He was in the game when the East opened the third quarter with a 27-13 run to take control for good, but that

He sat on the end of the East bench for the final 2:55 of the third quarter and all of the fourth.

"Phil (Jackson) asked me, he said one of you two had to go back in. Scottie (Pippen) looked at me, I looked at him, and I said, 'I'm a couple of years older, so you go back in," Jordan said.

The voting by seven media members - the final tally was four votes for Jordan, three for O'Neal - was conducted late in the fourth quarter, and the ballots were collected with O'Neal then had a rebound, a short one-hander, and capped his scoring with a monster dunk on a fast break with 40.6 seconds left.

"It was a tremendous dunk,"

Patrick Ewing said.

"David Robinson had a lot of courage to go and try to block it. I wouldn't have. I would have gotten out of the way."

O'Neal was 10-of-16 from the field, scoring on a couple of turnaround jumpers from the baseline, a few runners across the lane and a number of dunks. He also played more minutes than the combined total of his two backups: Ewing and Alonzo

"I thought Shaq deserved the MVP," Charles Barkley said. "Michael didn't play any in the fourth quarter. Shaq played down the stretch and got a lot of points, but they took the voting before the game ended."

"Let's not leave this NBA weekend on a negative note. Everybody can disagree with it. I disagree on it. But let's not let it ruin the weekend," Barkley said.

Unfortunately, it was too late for that, as far as O'Neal and the fans were concerned.

O'Neal answered questions at his locker for several minutes but refused to go to the NBA's interview room. As he walked out of the building before any other player, his trademark smile was gone and his usual good-natured demeanor was missing.

By all appearances, Shaq had indeed been stiffed.

Espy's give Ripken, Lobo top honors

NEW YORK - Cal Ripken Jr. and Rebecca Lobo each won two ESPY Awards Monday night, including top male and female athlete honors.

Ripken, who broke Lou Gehrig's record for consecutive games played, won the Showstopper of the Year award as well as Male Athlete of the Year. Ripken's 2,131st straight game was the showstopper winner.

"You have to excuse me. I have the sniffles and a scratchy throat," Ripken said with a sly smile. "Good thing it's the offseason, because I don't think I could play with this.

Lobo, who led Connecticut to the NCAA championship, was selected Female Athlete of the Year and the best women's college basketball player. The outstanding team was Lobo's Connecticut Huskies, who went undefeated in taking the NCAA title.

"I play a team sport, so I am basically just here representing them," Lobo said.

Awards were presented in 34 categories, including 17 performer of the year selections. A portion of the proceeds will be donated to The V foundation, established at the inaugural ESPYs in 1993 by Jim Valvano, the late coach at North Carolina State, to help raise funds for cancer research.

Michael Jordan won the comeback award, then was comically interrogated by comedian Bill Murray, who asked Jordan whether he deserved the NBA All-Star game award he won the previous day over Shaquille O'Neal and the comeback award over Monica Seles. The outstanding coach-manager was Gary Barnett, the football coach at Northwestern.

"We more or less captured the hearts of the people of America," Barnett said.

Dodgers rookie pitcher Hideo Nomo, the first Japanese player to have an impact in the major leagues, was the breakthrough athlete. He thanked ESPN, the Dodgers, his family, teammates and the United States.

Individual sports winners were Hakeem Olajuwon (pro basketball), Brett Favre (pro football), Greg Maddux (pro baseball), Eric Lindros (pro hockey), Eddie George (college football), Ed O'Bannon (college basketball), Corey Pavin (men's golf), Annika Sorenstam (women's golf), Pete Sampras (men's tennis), Steffi Graf (women's tennis), Jeff Gordon (auto racing), Michael Johnson (men's track and field), Kim Batten (women's track and field), Roy Jones Jr. (boxing), Jerry Bailey (jockey) and Mike Aulby (bowling).

Tanner predicted a stormy House debate over the issue, which has been rejected several times in recent years, including twice during the 1994 session. It did not come up last year.

"There will be a lot of passions on both sides of the bill," he said. "It'll be very close as it has been in the past." The bill would allow universities to exempt 10 percent of each entering freshmen class from the admissions requirements. The committee finally endorsed the bill after a series of failed amendments, including one that would set up a pilot program by requiring only one of the universities to use the admissions standards, and another to exclude athletes from the 10 percent

Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, said that if athletes receive scholarships, they should meet the same requirements that the other 90 percent of the students must meet.

"I don't think it's fair to athletes," said Rep. Barbara Ballard, D-Lawrence. "That's a gross assumption, that all athletes are dumb jocks. It is a stereotype.

"I know that athletes are sometimes the best students," he said.

The Board of Regents would set the college preparatory curriculum, but under the bill it must include four years of English, three of mathematics, three of social studies, three of natural sciences and two of a foreign

VALENTINE'S DAY

Lafene sells condom-grams, hopes to prevent AIDS, STDS

Gifts are not the only thing couples will be wrapping this Valentine's Day.

The American Social Health Association has designated Feb. 14 as National Condom Day.

STD, HIV, and AIDS Peer Educators, or S.H.A.P.E., a group sponsored by Lafene Health Center, started selling condomgrams Monday in conjunction with National Condom Day and will continue selling them today.

The condom-grams are 50 cents and available at the K-State Student Union from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The condom-gram includes two informational brochures about AIDS and the Hepatitis B Virus, a questionnaire to determine your high/low risk factor for sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS, a contract for a safe and healthy sexual life, and a condom enclosed in a red heart.

"One out of every seven college students have an STD. That really gives you something to think about," said Anne Dunbar, sophomore special education and S.H.A.P.E member.

About 55 million Americans have STDs, with 12 million new infections each year. Two-thirds of new infections occur in people younger than 25 years old and onefourth occur in teenagers, according to information published by the American Social Health Association.

Genital warts are the most common STD among college students at the present time, according to the ASHA.

"Abstinence is your safest alternative. However, if this is not your choice, then protect yourself, your future and your life." said Reita Currie, registered nurse for the Health Education and Promotion Center at Condom-grams aren't just for your loved ones, Currie said.

"Why not buy one for your roommates and friends?" Currie said.

Students involved in S.H.A.P.E. do presentations throughout the semester about HIV/AIDS and STD awareness. A new class of 15 peer educators is selected each semester after an application and interview

The class is for three hours credit, requires instructor permission and has a two semester requirement.

The largest privilege fee on campus was up for discussion

Tuesday night. In the first meeting of the Committee for the Campus, a new group designed to solicit general student opinion, students voted to favorably recommend a bill which would increase the student healthcare privilege fee from $70 per semester to $90 per semester. "It's a standing committee that legislation can be referred to, and it is designed to solicit outside student input," Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

Out of an audience of about 30, only two were not affiliated with Lafene Health Center or Student Senate, he said.

Senate will vote on the studenthealth privilege fee Thursday night in addition to an identical recommendation from the Privilege Fee Committee.

The $20 increase in the student health-care privilege fee will reduce the student health-care budget by 3 percent.

The increase is needed to offset the $2.4-million, student healthcare reserve account, which has been rapidly depleting since the user fee was reduced in 1989.

"You are only limited by your visions," said Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education.

Her perseverance and vision paid off once again when she wanted to become a professor at K-State.

"I like K-State. It is a friendly campus that is forward-looking. It has got a can-do attitude, and that is exciting," Unger said.

Since coming to K-State 30 years ago as an assistant professor in mathematics, Unger has served as associate director of computing network services and assistant dean of graduate

Despite Unger's numerous responsibilities as dean of continuing education and vice provost for academic services and technology, she continues to be a professor of computer and information sciences.

"When I taught, I found the students are extremely hard working, intelligent and willing to try new ideas. I am still finding that. You can't underestimate the kind of students this institution attracts.

"They are really great kids. They are fun to teach. For the most part, they are ready to take on the world. If you just give them the challenge, they will meet it. It makes exciting times in the classroom," she said.

Unger said the highlight of her professional career has been the introduction of technology into the learning process, high-tech classrooms, and development of technology to assist the faculty in the acquisition and creation of course work and courseware.

"For example, the number of user identifications has grown dramatically in this period of time. In a large course that is offered each semester, 10 percent of the students had user ID so the professor could communicate with them through electronic mail.

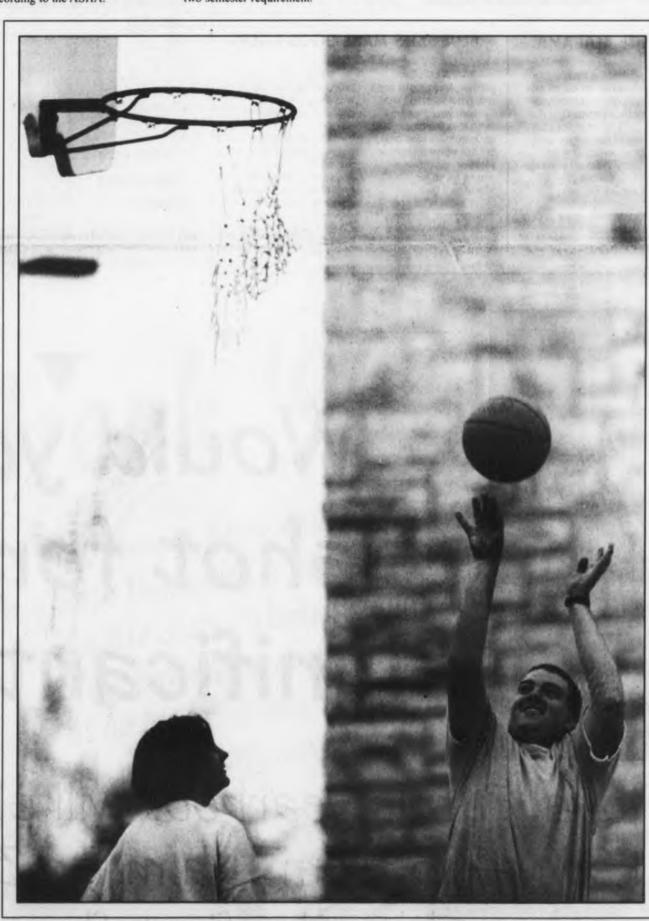

"This semester the professor voluntary set up electronic discussion groups called list serve. Sixty-seven percent of the students have already actively participated. That is onesemester difference," Unger said.

She said the use of the World Wide Web in the instructional process during the last two years has increased significantly as well.

"It is enormous. The use of it in high-tech classrooms has been very gratifying. What I consider the effective and reasonable use of technology to augment the teaching process and to really elaborate the learning process for students is really the most

"I think it is so exciting to see that happen. I think in many senses our

Gramm plans to quit presidential race

CONCORD, N.H. Battered by back-to-back defeats in Iowa and Louisiana, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm called top supporters around the country Tuesday night and told them he would quit the Republican presidential race, GOP sources said. Gramm planned an afternoon announcement today

Gramm's departure would leave an eight-man GOP field with one week to go before the New Hampshire primary. It also would remove from the race a dogged conservative campaigner who early on was viewed by Sen. Bob Dole's campaign as the biggest threat to his status as the GOP front-runner. But Gramm's campaign never

City Commission discusses use of 27 advisory boards

 Commissioners debate concerns about lobbying from board members

Chris Oakley

City commissioners discussed ways it could better use advisory boards at its work session Tuesday.

There are 27 advisory boards, each of which consists of members appointed by the mayor and specialize in specific areas. They discuss topics such as zoning appeals, parks and recreation, and public housing.

Mayor Edith Stunkel suggested to the commission that it let individual board members decide if they feel the boards are serving their Commissioner Bruce Snead said. intended purpose.

"It is my intention that we empower the boards and they make any changes," Stunkel

The commission sent surveys to all members of the advisory boards asking for suggestions in ways the boards could improve.

Many of the advisory boards did not complete the survey, Stunkel said.

But Commissioner Sydney Carlin said the city has active communication with many of the boards that did not complete the survey. Commissioners decided they needed to communicate better with each board.

"I think if we as commissioners want to go to an advisory board, we should. It helps us understand the minutes as they come to us,"

City attorney William Frost reminded commissioners that according to the state Open Meetings Law, if two or more commissioners are active at a meeting, the public must be notified prior to the meeting.

"If two of you are sitting in back discussing, then public perception is going to be that a meeting is taking place," Frost said.

Carlin said board members should be given commissioner's phone numbers when they are

"I think that the board members need to know that it's OK to contact us," Carlin said. "I appreciate having the minutes of their meeting. It is real important that as commissioners, we know what our boards are doing," she said

City manager Gary Greer said he did not want a situation where the boards could lobby their ideas to the commission.

"I think it is detrimental when we have political interactions between boards and commissioners," he said. But Stunkel said she didn't want board members to feel they couldn't come to commission meetings with ideas.

"Politics is a I think if we as commismessy business. I wouldn't want to preclude committee members from calling us if they have an opinion," Stunkel said.

Greer said most of the boards have a liaison from the city administration, which stays in contact with each board and often attends its meetings.

"I think the liaisons to the board need to sit down with them and explain what it is they need to do," he said.

Snead said the liaisons served an important role as a link between the boards and commission. The commission agreed the citizens who serve on the advisory boards be recognized for their effort and time.

"Whatever system we have, it's not going to be effective unless the people who are on the boards work hard and have incentive to do so," Commissioner Justin Kastner said.

In other business, the commission reviewed a draft of a proposed policy concerning what companies could be able to be considered for tax abatement. The proposed policy states two primary objectives in granting tax abatements, which are to provide jobs and expand the economic tax base of the city. The proposal states the commission would not give an abatement unless the public revenues exceed the costs at some time during the abatement term.

The proposed policy also states the only business able to receive tax abatements are new or expanding businesses engaged in manufacturing articles or commerce, conducting research and development, or storing goods or commodities which are sold or traded in interstate commerce, which results in additional employment

Greer said the policy would be used as a guide for commissioners when deciding whether to improve abatements.

"A key issue of the center is the return factor to the area," said Becky Blake, task force member and director of the Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"If we can draw people in with a visitors center, they may be more willing to stop next time and visit the places they read about," Blake said. "This would benefit the area by bringing in people who probably would not have stopped otherwise," she said. The task force, which has 18 members, is in charge of establishing a center that will benefit all four counties. "Of course we want the center to be feasible and generate money." Pence

"But the main focus is to promote the communities within the area and display what each has to offer." Helping promote the communities was one of the reasons the task force involved the public.

"Our main focus is community involvement in this project," he said. "We want the public's input, and we plan to follow up on what is mentioned. "Being open with the public and honestly listening to the residents has been our commitment from the beginning of this project, with hopes of moving on from phase one soon.

Public meetings have also been planned for the next two weeks to gather information from the other three counties.

"Our next step is to meet with people from the other counties and get back to the drawing board to find out if we have any consensus," Pence said.

Reserves to scale back 16,000 troops

WASHINGTON - Nearly 16,000 positions in Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps reserve forces from coast to coast will be eliminated and hundreds of units will close in the next seven months, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

The reductions are the third in a series of five important cutbacks designed to adjust the military to new defense requirements in the aftermath of the Cold War.

"In the future, we will have a smaller force structure, but it will be one that is highly ready and wellequipped," Defense Secretary William Perry said in announcing the cutbacks.

National Guard and Reserve forces, which peaked at 1.2 million people in 1989, are to be cut by about 15,900 this year to 975,100. The Pentagon's goal is to eliminate anoth-

Metered fee unreasonable for dial-up use

QUICKread

Dial-up fee proposals would place majority of fee burden on students.

Heads up, students. You are about to be screwed again.

Faculty Senate has proposed a bill to go into effect July 1 that sets charges for dial-up access to the University computer system.

The proposal has three options. Option one would charge users $10 per month for 50 hours of connection time plus 50 cents per hour afterwards.

Option two would charge $25 per month for 100 hours, plus 50 cents per Option three would allow departments and organizations to buy a line for $110 per month for unmetered usage. Only certain IDs could access

This sounds pretty reasonable, you say? What's the problem?

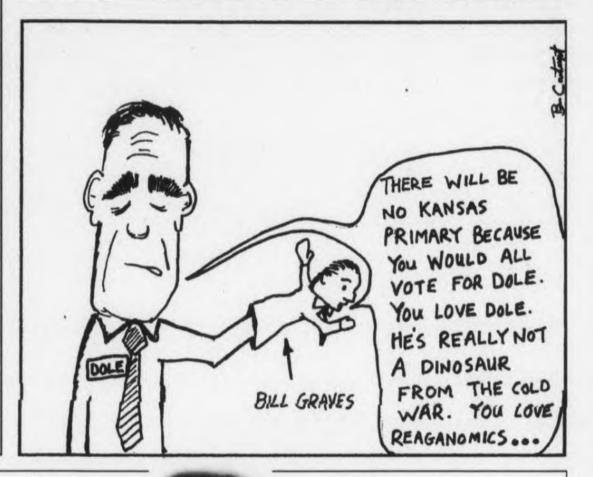

First, these charges are comparable to commercial vendors, but if you spend any significant time on the computer, it's cheaper to go with Flint Hills Computer Systems, which charges $15 for 200 hours and then 20 cents an hour thereafter. With more faculty requiring students to do research via the Internet, it is likely students will spend more than 50 hours per month on the computer.

Second, when departments buy lines, faculty will be able to dial in from home virtually free. The "certain" IDs allowed are almost certain to be faculty members, not students in departments.

And amazingly enough, were these proposals brought before Student Senate so students could give their opinions? Of course not. The faculty bypassed Senate and has no intention of bringing these proposals before students. They are fixed. Permanent.

When is the University going to learn it should at least kiss us first?

Notes from the underground

ob Dole is a winner. Steve Forbes is a loser.

Now that the Iowa caucuses traditionally the first step of the long and messy campaign trail - are concluded, it's time to reflect on what is quickly shaping up to be another in a string of tragically disappointing presidential elections.

First, the Republicans, and let's begin with the losers. Actually, let's begin with the folks who came out even worse than losers. California Rep. Bob Dornan (less than one percent), Illinois businessman Morry Taylor (one percent), Indiana Sen. Dick Lugar (four percent) and former ambassador Alan Keyes (seven percent) were dead before they got there. Someone chose to vote for them, which has to be uplifting. But I will be surprised if any of them make it to New Hampshire.

dead. (If you see Student Senate Chair John Potter, offer your condolences he's sure to be in mourning). After losing Louisiana to conservative commentator Pat Buchanan last week, Gramm's poor showing in Iowa (9 percent) was a death sentence. He will probably make an appearance in New Hampshire, but that's voters. Recent polls showed him a close second behind Dole, but the Iowa voters chose otherwise (10 Myview percent). Forbes remains a contender for one reason - no matter how poorly he polls, he has the money to stay in

If that reminds you of another independently wealthy presidential candidate, relax. The giant sucking sound you hear is the sound of votes coming from Lamar "Flannel Boy" Alexander.

DAN

Alexander finished a surprising third (18 percent) in Iowa but has to wonder what might have been. His base consists primarily of moderates Texas Sen. Phil Gramm is also who have rejected a pandering Dole and a foaming-at-the-mouth-conservative Buchanan. If Forbes' star dwindles enough, Alexander could pick up enough of the slack to make a run of Buchanan, whose anti-semitic remarks in 1992 (he told a group of Jewish protesters his rally was for "real Americans") did him in after a strong showing in New Hampshire, has to be scaring Dole.

A solid second-place finish (26 percent) in Iowa, a surprise win in Louisiana and his '92 outcome in New Hampshire (he stole nearly a third of the vote from incumbent President George Bush) make Buchanan a more credible opponent than most expected.

But he still has to beat Dole, the winner in Iowa (26 percent). Dole has the money, the endorsements and the name recognition - all important advantages in the long haul.

This makes it look more and more like November will feature a Clinton-Dole match-up. Once again, we have two lead candidates who couldn't find a principle if it rapped their knuckles

President Clinton, who ran unopposed in Iowa, has consistently caved on virtually every moral stance he has taken, from gays in the military to Haitian refugees. And while one may not agree with his position on issues, it would at least be nice if he'd maintain that position. And speaking of positions. Dole has shown more positions than "The Joy of Sex." When he proclaimed his win in Iowa a victory for conservative values, Barry Goldwater must have crawled into his grave just to roll over. Dole was a moderate when America needed moderation. Now that conservative is cool, he claims to be conservative? Yeah, right. Next thing you know he'll say his divorce makes him one with the common man, while extolling importance of family values to win over the religious right.

I'm afraid I've lied. When I said would start with the losers, I should have listed the American people first. Once again we will be faced with a choice between two (or more) people who stand for little more than a vote. And we will lose the election.

I'm a registered Democrat, so I'll ick on the most likely Republican candidate, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

One of the concerns I think students should have about Dole, or many other Republicans, is they want to cut student loans - something thousands of us rely on to further our education. While President Clinton has made loans more accessible, I've been told by Republican supporters they don't want to cut loans, they want to reduce the growth of them.

With larger numbers of students graduating high schools and heading for college. college every year, how is growth of the need for loans going to be reduced? It won't, and thereby the only way to reduce the growth will be to apply stricter policy to who will be eligible for

For many of us these loans provide the opportunity to get an education, and one day enter the job market of our choice. Education of the public also keeps our nation where it is on a global scale. Without educated people, our country would soon fall behind in global

The last topic I would like to cover is the balanced budget. I have heard Dole express that he would get a balanced budget through if elected. He seems to be failing to learn from President Clinton's mistakes. Clinton thought that Clinton's mistakes. Clinton thought that with a Democratic Congress and a Democratic president he could accomplish the same. Many people said Clinton is a liar for having said he would pass legislation on a balanced budget.

Calling any politician a liar is like calling a snake cold-blooded. If people want to get elected, they must tell you these things. Who would vote for a candidate who said "It think I can pass legis."

Lafene services worth cost of fee or the past few weeks, the rage has been the debate about whether certain student fees are necessary.

Money is a sensitive subject, as we have seen during this period of time, from the rhetoric printed in the Collegian to the colored chalk on sidewalks around campus. Budgets are tough things.

From setting aside money for next week's groceries to tightening belts in academic departments, it's something everyone has to deal with.

l almost wonder if the campus has not seen this kind of activity since the tumultuous days of the late 1960s and early 1970s. The kind of ardent fervor which seems to be absent in student elections was embraced then by many students, who were anxious about where and how their money was going to be spent. We are faced with another possible rise in fees dealing with Lafene

Health Center. The cuts that could be made if the raise isn't approved would put every student on this campus at a severe disadvantage. Seventy to 75 percent of Lafene's money comes from the student health fee paid during registration. Twenty-five to 30 percent of Lafene's money comes from different user fees.

The rate for the past two years has been $70; the proposed increase will make it $90. By paying the new $90 fee, Lafene will remain the way it is - an efficient pharmacy at a reduced rate, and x-Wild rays are cheaper than in a hospital. The fee defrays all costs in all clinics.

Although spouses aren't covered by the fee their spouse pays, they can go into the business office and pay the same fee to be covered, as long as their spouse is a student enrolled in any amount of hours at

Cindy Burke, director of Health Education and Promotion, said she believes strongly in raising the fee. "It's like health insurance,"

Burke said. "Many people feel that they don't need it, because they aren't seriously ill very often." I feel the same way about Lafene. A lot of people might not use Lafene's services on a regular basis, but it certainly comes in handy when one is sick.

With Lafene's Saturday and extended hours, there is often open space when a student may seek treatment.

"Take into consideration the ease of seeing a physician at Lafene. Anywhere else in Manhattan, there's a long wait," Burke said. "If fees are cut at Lafene, it will cost money each time a student consults a physician at Lafene," she added.

Additionally, if fees are cut, students may not be able to seek medical consultation outside of Lafene.

"Many doctors in Manhattan simply don't have the time to see extra patients," Burke said. 'Manhattan doesn't have the amount of doctors needed to treat an extra 20,000 people.

Within the confines of the proections, another area which would be hard hit by cuts, Burke said, is the Health Education Department. Health Education provides many services, such as the annual of Health, AIDS Carnival Awareness Week and New Student Orientations.

The flagship of Health Education is a group called S.H.A.P.E., which stands for STD, HIV, AIDS Peer Educators. Since its founding in 1986, the group has educated literally hundreds of students about the dangers of unprotected sex. Burke said if fees aren't raised, S.H.A.P.E., as well as many other Health Education services, will be cut.

Even if an individual doesn't use Lafene much, there is always the possibility of an emergency. Lafene isn't a comprehensive health insurance plan; it is, however, a nice cushion to fall on when one comes down with a cold or the flu a few days before a test

For an extra $20, all of Lafene's services will remain intact. The Health Education department has helped the student body for years and is a necessary part of our lives on campus. All of this may not seem like a big deal now, but the next time you need inexpensive, quality medication, or a visit to a physician, I guarantee it will seem like a matter of life and death.

After finishing the regular season at 19-10 and a disappointing 5-7 in conference play, the K-State women's volleyball team was looking for someone who could have an immediate effect.

The women's team was supposed to be able to offer only three scholarships to recruits. But with Anna Kaloujskikh transferring, the team was allowed four scholarships to give to new recruits.

Coach Jim Moore ended up recruiting four impact players. At the top of the list is Abbie Brown, a 5-foot-11 middle blocker from Eldora, Iowa. Coach Jim Moore said Brown was K-State's top recruit.

"Abbie was the one player that we thought could do the things that we absolutely had to have done next year," Moore said. "In terms of our primary needs for the team next year, she was our top recruit."

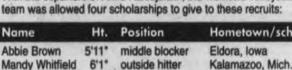

Brown's high school coach, Mark Arnold said Brown brings a lot of good qualities to

'She understands the game very well. She's a tremendous leader, and of course, she is one of the most powerful hitters in the state," Arnold said. "She has such good knowledge of the game and so much experience that I really don't see her having a hard time adjusting to the college level."

team with 6'3" Heather Lindell from Fort Morgan, Colo. Moore said athletically, Lindell is the best recruit, but she might not have an immediate effect.

come from 5'11" recruit, Dawn Cady from Marshall, Minn.

"I really think she is going to surprise some people around here," Moore said. "I believe that she will do some terrific things for us this year."

With the four recruits K-State landed, Moore said he feels he has landed one of the best recruiting classes.

'The level of play with all four of them is tremendous," Moore said. "I think that it is safe to say that if a top-25 program got these four recruits, they would be very happy. So yes, I feel good about this incoming class."

Dream Team III expected to win gold easily

ATLANTA - The first five victims for Dream Team III got the bad news Tuesday.

The U.S. team, which includes NBA stars such as Hakeem Olajuwan, Shaquille O'Neal and John Stockton, will open the Atlanta Olympics against Argentina July 20, followed by Angola July 22, Lithuania July 24, China July 26 and Croatia July

Officials with the International Basketball Federation (FIBA) determined the preliminary basketball schedule by drawing the names of countries out of glass bowls.

"We're not going to take anyone for granted," said Lenny Wilkens of the Atlanta Hawks, who will coach the Americans.

But everyone else concedes the real race in the men's competition will be for the silver medal just as it was at the 1992 Games in Barcelona, where the Americans won all eight games by an average score

'We have a good team with a lot of talent," said Los Angeles Lakers center Vlade Divac, star of the Yugoslavian team that is the leading contender for the silver. "We know it's going to be tough to play against the Dream Team, but second is not bad.' On the women's side, the competition should be much tighter among the Americans, world-champion Brazil and perennial-power Russia.

"The women are a very balanced competition," said Renato Brito Cunha, president of the Brazilian Confederation of Basketball. "I think you could have eight teams with a chance of medaling."

The strongest competition for American men in the preliminary round is likely to come from 1992 silver medalist Croatia, which lost to the original Dream Team 117-85 in the championship game at Barcelona, and Lithuania, the bronze medalist four years ago and runner-up at the most recent European Championships.

The Croatians have Toni Kukoc of the Chicago Bulls and Dino Radja of the Boston Celtics, while Lithuania features Portland's Arvydas Sabonis and Seattle's Sarunas Marciulionis.

The other men's bracket includes European champion Yugoslavia, America's champ Puerto Rico, Oceania champ Australia, first-time qualifier Greece, South Korea and Brazil.

"Yugoslavia is an excellent team," Wilkens said. "They have a quality player in Vlade Divac, and they play more of a pro-type game. And don't count

ANN ARBOR, Mich. - Russ Millard had 18 points and a career-high 15 rebounds to lead No. 19 Iowa to a 62-55 victory against Michigan Tuesday night, the Hawkeyes' first road win against the Wolverines in 15 years.

Andre Woolridge had 20 points for the Hawkeyes (18-6, 7-5 Big Ten), who won just their second conference road game this season

Iowa's last win in Ann Arbor was a 75-58 victory in 1981. Michigan's Maurice Taylor scored 16 of his 20 points in the second half as the Wolverines (15-9, 5-6) tried to rally back from Instead, they lost for the fifth time in six games. Michigan also lost its second-straight home game after a 15-game winning streak at Crisler Arena.

Maceo Baston added 12 points for the Wolverines. Iowa, which led 28-17 at halftime in the low-scoring, sloppily played game, opened up its biggest lead at 38-22 when

Millard scored on a feed from Mon'ter Glasper with 13:51 to go. Michigan got the deficit down to single digits with 9:26 remaining when Baston scored on a putback to make it 43-34. But the closest the Wolverines could get was a five-point deficit on three occasions, the last when Taylor made his first three-pointer of the year to leave his team down 57-52 with 59

Millard and Wooolridge combined to make three of four free throws, and Woolridge scored on a drive to restore the doubledigit lead before Michigan's Dugan Fife made a three-pointer at the final buzzer.

Iowa shot 43 percent for the game and needed a 53 percent second half to do that. Michigan shot 36 percent. The Hawkeyes, who lead the Big Ten and rank fourth nationally in rebounding margin, enjoyed a 46-27 advantage on the Millard, a 6-foot-8 senior center, had eight rebounds at halftime en route to his career best. He previous high was 11.

The Hawkeyes won despite just six points from leading scorer Jess Settles, who fouled out with 6:53 remaining. Iowa was also playing without third-leading scorer Chris Kingsbury, who was sitting out the final game of a three-game

► HATCHER SHOULD RETURN THURSDAY

The results of precautionary tests taken Monday on K-State's Elliot Hatcher were normal, but more tests were scheduled for Tuesday on the senior pointguard, who was hospitalized briefly Saturday because of chest pains.

"Elliot had some blood work done Monday by one of the team doctors and all the results were fine," K-State basketball trainer Brant Berkstresser said. "Right now, it's the same diagnosis - an inflammation of the students are going to go out ahead of other universities. It doesn't matter what their major is, but what they know about electronic communications systems," Unger said.

The most difficult aspect of her job is the allocation of limited resources, she said.

"The toughest decisions that have had to been made this year is the allocation of too small of pool of resources for technologies and trying to figure out what project should get the resources that are available," Unger said.

She said she hopes the University can solve some of these challenges and the real challenges that come from the plethora of technology to chose from, Unger said. In the continuing education department, the introduction of TELENET 2 later this year is a unique program that sets this department apart from other universities, Unger said.

"It is a unique thing in the state right now. What it does is allow students that are geographically dispersed to feel like they are part of a classroom in that they can hear other students and see them.

"It is also a way to introduce that technology in the classrooms here on campus. It will allow us to bring experts in from around the world. As long as they have desktop video device, we can hook up and bring them in," Unger said.

Unger said the future of technology enhancing the learning environment is exciting, but she does not believe the traditional lecture classroom will ever go completely away.

Instead, Unger said technology will provide a richer environment.

"I think this next five years will be the most exciting K-State has seen in years. The change in the learning environment here is going to be dramatic.

"If we do it right, I think we are going to have students that really enjoy this experience and come out of here with skills and talents, completely successful and real competitive," Unger said.

The University has been moving forward the whole time and because of that it just continues to achieve, Unger said.

"I think the richness of the learning environment here is going to be dramatically different. I envision the entire campus being available network-wise.

"I don't mean in a fixed location particularly. I would like to see wireless networks everywhere. You can carry a laptop to the Union or out by the Vietnam memorial and do your homework," Unger said.

But if K-State were to contract a similar service, it would have to have money for additional space for equipment, she said.

The repair expenses and charges for the service would be directly paid to the contracting company.

"We are going to try to do it ourselves," Unger said.

The equipment that the University plans to buy will be nicer and faster than most contracted equipment, she said

One advantage of implementing a charge would be to help reduce the congestion on the lines, Unger said.

Unger said Computer Network Services timed the usage of the K-State server one night for one minute and calculated that all 64 lines were in use and within that minute, 130 people tried to log on but couldn't.

Each month 1,400 users log on to the source.

This makes it hard to log on during working hours, Unger said.

She said she thinks about 1,000 people will pay for the service.

And, depending on the number of users subscribed to the service, the charges could be reduced after the initial equipment is purchased, Unger

Access will still be free to those who use the K-State server in the computer labs and residence halls.

"We are trying to provide a nice service for those who do not come to

"I think it really is going to be a

Mickey Ransom, chair of the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning, said the committee will not oppose the charges.

"No one is enthusiastic about this proposal, but it may be a necessary evil," Ransom said.

By implementing modem charges the University will be able to expand lines to the SLIP connection.

look at where we are."

Several of Gramm's top supporters had urged him to quit the campaign and concentrate on his Texas Senate race.

But a few advisers wanted him to hold on through the Feb. 20 leadoff New Hampshire primary in case Dole faltered.

Jim Courtovich, Gramm's New Hampshire campaign manager, said earlier Gramm canceled only one event Tuesday afternoon and his morning schedule in New Hampshire Wednesday.

"Tonight, Senator Gramm has to decide what to do," Courtovich said. "Tomorrow, we're making an announcement."

Gramm's national chairman, Arizona Sen. John McCain, said earlier supporters were "going through the options and I think in a day or so you'll see what the decision will be."

Gramm started deliberations on his future as the disappointing Iowa results came in.

McCain told Gramm to stop dissecting what had gone wrong and try to honestly assess his chances in the next two weeks, according to campaign sources.

New Hampshire Sen. Bob Smith, Gramm's top backer in the state, told Gramm his chances were bleak, according to the sources.

The sources said Gramm looked at three options: quit, retreat from New Hampshire to concentrate on a few Southern states, or retreat and make one last-ditch effort in South Carolina, which holds the first Southern primary on March 2.

At one point, Gramm said he would end his campaign if he did not finish in the top three in Iowa, but backed away from the statement in the weekend before the Iowa caucuses.

New Hampshire held little promise of a rebound for Gramm.

He has lagged in the single digits in the polls, behind Dole and multimillionaire publisher Steve Forbes. In recent weeks, commentator Pat

Buchanan and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander have been vying for the third spot here while Gramm's numbers have remained stagnant.

With moderates leaning toward Dole, Forbes or Alexander, Gramm has been left to compete with Buchanan for the smaller bloc of social conservatives in New Hampshire.

While Buchanan has remained loyal to New Hampshire, Gramm angered many Republicans by failing to rebuke efforts by Arizona and Delaware to encroach on New Hampshire's first primary.

Hampshire's first primary.

Gramm gave no inkling of his impending decision during a speech earlier Tuesday at a Concord business luncheon, where he attacked Buchanan's protectionist stance on trade.

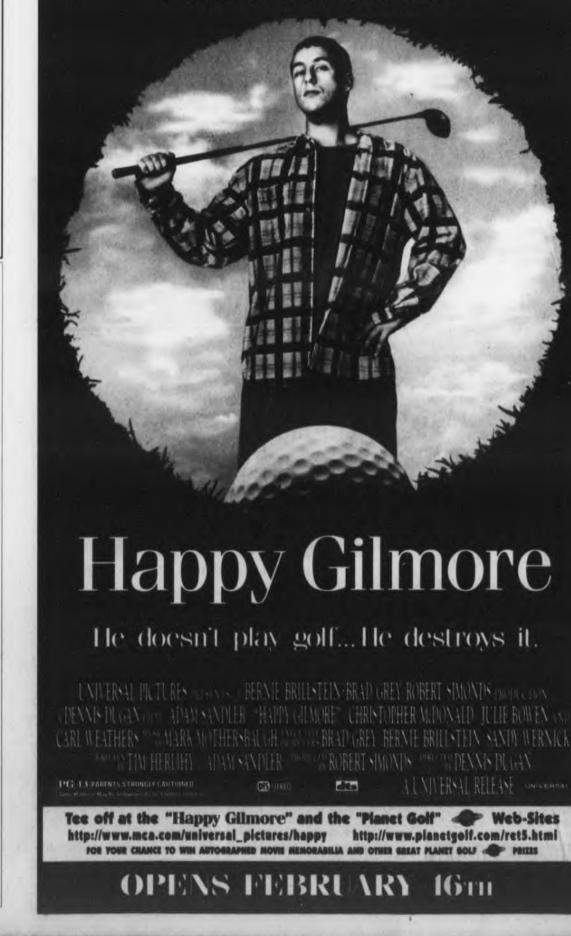

"We have let errant nonsense and second-rate thinking pass as real thinking and real policy on this topic," he said.

Gramm can't blame a lack of money for his poor showing.

He had raised $25 million coming into the campaign, but critics said he did not used his money wisely.

"We even have great heart-shaped holders to put the candles in," she said.

Then a gift that would please any woman are some of the aromatherapy products, Laurie said. "There is hand therapy, almond massage therapy, bath salts, bubble bath, potpourri and hand lotions," she said.

"We even have a.m. and p.m. shower gels. One wakes you up, and the other relaxes at night." Brass items are another popular gift, Laurie said.

"We have bells, candle holders and some items with hearts on them," she said.

Laurie said for a simple, last-minute gift, picture frames

"To give your loved one a picture of you," she said. The Country Gift Shop even has a gift if you are the one

"If you are fixing dinner, we have Love and Kisses pasta, red and white pasta that is in the shapes of little hearts," Laurie said.

■ If you want a last-minute, private, nighttime gift, then Patricia's Undercover might have what you are looking for. "Hot items for last-minute shoppers - is free gift wrapping," Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover, said. No one really enjoys having to wrap the gifts, so we do it for them, Yeager said.

"Lingerie, stretch lace and anything silk are always a good idea for gifts," she said.

The colors are the same as last year, too, Yeager said. "The colors for Valentine's Day are red, black and white," she said. "And in that order." Red seems to be leading the list, Yeager said.

"Get something soft to the touch and sexy," she said. The main thing is just not to forget Valentine's Day,

For ladies who are still looking for that special gift, Lowman's Clothing might be the place to get that lastminute gift for your man.

"We have boxers, cigars, ties and Nautica sport shirts that would make great gifts," Rust Bunker, a Lowman's Steve Lowman, a Lowman's employee, said just stop in and he will find you a gift.

"Just buying anything on sale to give as a gift is OK, too," Lowman said.

Shoppers browse through the aisle stocked with Valentine's Day candy Tuesday night at Dillons. Though many people bought Valentine's Day candy and cards weeks ago, the store's 24-hour convenience helped many last-minute shoppers late Tuesday night, as well as today.

On the Wildside in Aggieville provides that personalized gift idea that will take you back to the days of freedom and the 1960s.

"We have candles. People have been making personalized necklaces and bracelets for their loved ones," said Chad Swiercinsky, an On the Wildside employee.

Swiercinsky said they even have heart-shaped hand-

"Incense have not been selling as a gift, though they are a good idea," Swiercinsky said.

If you want a place to take your valentine for dinner and a social outing, then head over to Rusty's Last Chance

"We will be giving away free roses to the ladies," said Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant &

Wilson said Rusty's will have T-shirts and Valentine's Day gifts that they will be giving out throughout the

Another last-minute idea is to go to the movies.

The Westloop 6 Theatres are showing "12 Monkeys," "Bed of Roses," "Grumpier Old Men," "Dead Man Walking," "Black Sheep" and "From Dusk Till Dawn."

Seth Childs Cinema is showing "White Squall," "The Juror," "Broken Arrow," "Father of the Bride 2," "Mr. Holland's Opus" and "Sense and Sensibility."

Well, these are some of the last-minute shopping ideas I found while shopping.

Remember, Patricia Yeager said not to forget your Valentine's Day gift.

Otherwise you could be the Dead Man Walking.

Also, one gift not to get as a last-minute Valentine's

And if you have to work late or have lots of homework keeping you busy today - Dillons is open 24 hours, and it has both a floral department and cards.

The Collegian does not endorse any of these gifts as the best or perfect Valentine's Day gifts. It just hopes it helps you stay out

Radio cupids arrange date

KSDB-FM 91.9 could be your love connection tonight when "A Purple Affair" plays Cupid in the dating game, all in the spirit of St.

The date will consist of dinner and a movie and will be sponsored by Seth Childs Cinemas

and Lucky BrewGrille

The mystery date will be presented between 10-11p.m. to question eligible candidates, and the date will be chosen based on his answers.

She was selected because of her personality and attitude, but she will remain anonymous

"She was picked because she was kind of sought after," Aaron Decker, co-host of the show, said.

"She's called the program before, and she's a very outgoing person, the type of person that would have fun going on a blind date.

"If I weren't on the show, and didn't have a girlfriend already, my ear would be glued to the radio at the chance to go on a free date with a great girl," he said.

A female contestant was elected instead of a male, because on average, most of the callers are male, Decker said.

The mystery date, a senior in electronic journalism, said it will be difficult to pick someone based on his voice.

"I would like a very masculine voice, one that sounds like he's kind of a Brad Pitt," she said. "One thing I really like is a sense of

"I'm not going to be able to get much out a phone conversation, but I don't want a guy that's real cocky ...," she said.

Callers will answer questions from both the mystery date as well as from a preliminary pot of questions compiled by the hosts.

These preliminary questions include "What is your idea of a fun night?" and "How far is too far on the first date?

The mystery date's personal questions are more along the lines of "Boxers or briefs: What kind are you wearing right nowz?" "What are your favorite TV shows?" And "How often do you masturbate?"

In addition to the the dating game, the regular guest will be Geraldine Piorkowski, the author of "Too Close for Comfort: Exploring the Risks of Intimacy." The discussion will be on why love is a dangerous myth.

ACADEMY AWARDS

'Braveheart' tops list of Oscar nominations

Associated Press

"Braveheart," actor-director Mel Gibson's battlefield epic about 13th-century Scotland, captured a leading 10 Academy Award nominations Tuesday, including best picture. It will be up against "Apollo ," "Babe," "Sense and 13," "Babe," "Sense and Sensibility," and Italy's "The Postman" for the year's best movie. Massimo Troisi was nominated for best actor in "The Postman," the first posthumous lead acting selection in 20 years.

Also nominated for best actor were Nicolas Cage in "Leaving Las Vegas," Richard Dreyfuss in "Mr. Holland's Opus," Anthony Hopkins in "Nixon" and Sean Penn in "Dead Man Walking".

Emma Thompson was nominated for best actress for "Sense and Sensibility," and for writing the film's script - an Oscar first for an actress. She faces Susan Sarandon in "Dead Man Walking," Elisabeth Shue in "Leaving Las Vegas," Sharon Stone in "Casino" and Meryl Streep in "The Bridges of Madison County."

Even though "Leaving Las Vegas" was not picked for best picture, as was widely expected, director Mike Figgis was nominated for best director. He faces Gibson, "Babe's" Chris Noonan, "The Postman's" Michael Radford and actor Tim Robbins, who directed "Dead Man Walking."

The supporting acting nominces are first-time Oscar honorees: James Cromwell in "Babe," Ed Harris in "Apollo 13," Brad Pitt in "12 Monkeys," Tim Roth in "Rob Roy" and Kevin Spacey in "The Usual Suspects."

Joan Allen was nominated for best supporting actress for "Nixon," as were Kathleen Quinlan for "Apollo 13," Mira Sorvino in "Mighty Aphrodite," Mare Winningham for "Georgia" and Kate Winslet for "Sense and Sensibility.

In addition to picture and directing, "Braveheart" was nominated for cinematography, costumes, editing, makeup, original score, sound, sound effects editing and original screenplay.

The original screenplay nominations were "Braveheart," "Mighty Aphrodite," "Nixon,"
"Toy Story" and "The Usual Suspects."

The adapted screenplay picks were "Apollo 13," "Babe," "Leaving Las Vegas," "The Postman" and "Sense and Sensibility."

There was little controversy around the documentary feature nominations, unlike last year when the celebrated "Hoop Dreams" was overlooked, triggering revision of the category's nomination procedures. The nominees were "Anne Frank Remembered," "The Battle Over 'Citizen Kane," "Fiddlefest," "Hank Aaron: Chasing the Dream," and "Troublesome Creek: A Midwestern."

This year's Oscars will be presented March 25 at the Los Angeles Music Center.

Whoopi Goldberg will be host of the awards televised live by staff report Students paused from crunching on apples and studying texts as crisp sounds of a thumb piano filtered through the air at the K-State Student Union Tuesday.

Students peered over railings on the second and third floors to see Arthur Flowers, poet, musician and novelist thumbing his kalimba in the Union Courtyard.

"I am primarily a novelist," Flowers said. "There are two literary traditions I add to - the Westernwritten tradition and the African-oral tradition."

As part of his program, Flowers used the thumb piano and a harmonica to add musical background to his poetry and dramatically read excerpts from his newest novel, "Another Good Lovin' Blues.'

about 'Whoa, that sure was good. I sure did enjoy that. I hope to hear that boy again,' instead of 'That sure was a good book, and I'm going to go get that book," Flowers said.

Flowers, from Memphis, got his start in New York where he was referred to as a blues man.

He said he is very proud of his delta heritage.

"I've been very conscious of being part of the methopoetic tradition of the delta," Flowers said. "That's why in all of my novels, they deal with the blues and voodoo, because I consider those spiritual traditions."

The themes of his works presented Tuesday involved trouble, and a couple of his pieces contained lines offering the advice: "Trouble, it don't last always."

Flowers teaches advanced fiction in New York City and has written two novels and a children's book.

He has received two grants in literature, said Patrick Carney, Union Program Council president. The program is sponsored as part of Black History Month.

The program was followed with a book signing by Flowers in front of the Union Bookstore.

WE WANT TO SEE THE CHRISTMAS CARD ELAINE WAS ON

The New York Times reports Kenny Kramer, the person the role of Kramer on the television show "Seinfeld" was based on, has created Kramer's Reality Tour. For a modest $27.50, spectators are taken on a bus tour of all the sites in downtown New York City familiar to "Seinfeld" fans.

Stops on the tour include the building where the character Elaine works, where George did the cleaning lady, and where the fictitious Kramer proposed his coffee table book about coffee tables. Other sites include the New York Health and Racquet Club where George took a leak in the shower.

SCOTT ALLEN Miller

Now if only we could get tours for other popular television shows. Here are some ideas:

The Friends Tour. We could see the Central Perk coffee house, the only cafe in New York City with a window sign that reads backwards from the outside.

Beavis and Butt-Head's neighborhood. We could see Tom Anderson's house where the boys burned his hedges, chainsawed his trees and the adjacent utility poles down, and where they filled his swimming pool in with cement; Stewart's house where Beavis first metamorphosed into Cornholio; their house; and the field where they used to play baseball with a frog.

The Public Safety Committee of the California Assembly approved a bill that, if enacted, would permit bailiffs or parents to administer up to 10 whacks with a paddle for any juvenile convicted of graffiti vandalism.

The bill has its supporters and detractors. Its supporters insist that the bill should be amended to require the parents and bailiffs to wear leather motorcycle outfits and yell "You bad, bad boy/girl!" while doing the spanking. Reports that Madonna will start vandalizing her neighborhood if the bill is made into law have not been confirmed.

Detractors claim the bill is too lenient, and they should instead be punished with a cat-of-nine-tails whip. They claim if a cat-of-nine-tails was good enough for Jesus, it should be good enough for the rest of us.

Restaurant earns big bucks with Club Keno

QUICKread ➤ Wichita's Heritage Restaurant beats its competition by being the only area establishment to pay cash to Club Keno winners.

WICHITA - The gamblers sit together around dining tables, sipping coffee, fingering ticket stubs and anxiously watching numbers flash on a television monitor.

If any of them choose the right numbers, they might win several hundred dollars - or at least a few bucks to cover their wager.

The scene is similar to many eating spots in Las Vegas, where Keno girls sell tickets to diners. But this is Heritage Restaurant, a family establishment on the southern edge of Wichita, and the game is Club Keno.

"It's a gold mine," Jim Craig, a regular patron of Heritage Restaurant, said. "I don't fish. I don't hunt. I hate Bingo, but I like to play a little Club Keno."

That little game is big business for Mike and Sylvia Kang, who own the Heritage. Their restaurant in a busy commercial area of south Wichita sold $1.6 million in lottery tickets this year. More than $1 million of those sales were Club Keno tickets.

In a metropolitan area where more lottery tickets are sold and more prizes won than anywhere else in Kansas, the Heritage is top dog. No other business comes close to matching its lottery business. The next most prolific dealer in Wichita sold about $500,000 worth of tickets in fiscal 1995.

Perhaps the biggest winners at the Heritage aren't the players but the owners. As with all lottery dealers, the Kangs are allowed to keep 5 percent of the revenue from all lottery ticket sales. That will translate into close to $86,000 for this year, according to lottery officials.

Mike Kang just smiles when asked why his business is so good.

'When they win here, we pay cash. In other places when they win, they have to get a check from the lottery," Kang said. The lottery encourages dealers - but doesn't require them - to pay out prizes of $599 or less. Many places choose not to handle that much cash.

Kang likes to keep things relaxed, particularly because most of the players are regular customers who live in the

"We don't mind if they come in, sit down, stay awhile and play. My customers never complain when the food doesn't come out right away," he said. They like to play.

Craig, who looks comfortable in his black cowboy hat, white t-shirt and twoday beard, said he can't figure out why other places haven't copied Kang's approach to the game

"There ought to be more of them doing this," Craig, who used to own the Heritage, said. "I told the lottery people they ought to get a booth at the restaurant convention and sell this.

Lottery Director Greg Ziemak, who visited the Heritage recently as a goodwill gesture, said places that cater to lottery players the way Kang does are rare in "Some retailers really work hard at it," he said.

The Club Keno game is relatively simple. A player is given a printed sheet with 80 numbers on it. He can select between one and 10 numbers and can wager $1 to $5 on his choice. When 20 numbers appear on the television screen, via a closed-circuit broadcast, a player can win if he matches two or more of the numbers. A player has to buy a new slip with every game, and there is a new game every five minutes from 6 a.m. to 2:50 a.m. every day of the week. 'You can use your children's birthdays or whatever you want," Craig said. "Just remember, gambling money is just visiting. It just stays with you awhile and moves on.

AIDS study gives hope

■ New gel for women could kill HIV during intercourse

Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. - A cousin of the healthy bacteria found in yogurt helps women fight off vaginal infections naturally - and doctors are trying to harness these bugs to protect against the AIDS

They are trying to create a gel or cream a woman could insert into her vagina before sexual intercourse to kill HIV in case her partner had it.

AIDS researchers said Tuesday the need for these vaginal microbicides is huge because AIDS is skyrocketing among heterosexual women worldwide.

"We are really trying to get the word out on microbicides," said Sharon Hillier of the University of Pittsburgh, who in about a month will begin testing a candidate made with the bacteria on 900 teen-agers.

AIDS is the fourth-leading killer of U.S. women ages 25-44, and two-thirds were infected through sex.

Doctors tell women to insist their sexual partners use condoms to block HIV. But many women either don't ask, their partners refuse, or they use the condoms incorrectly.

A cheap, easy-to-use microbicide would give women more control to protect themselves, explained Zeda Rosenberg of the National Institutes of Health, which is spending about $12 million on microbicide research.

Within two years, NIH said it hopes to know if a spermicide ingredient already sold to help diaphragms and other birth-control devices work also fights HIV.

This ingredient, nonoxynol-9, kills HIV in the test tube but some studies suggest it actually increases women's risk because it irritates the vagina, creating footholds for HIV infection.

NIH now is funding a study of prostitutes in Cameroon and Kenya, where female HIV infection is epidemic, to settle the Hillier told AIDS researchers she is trying to create a natural microbicide made from the beneficial bacteria already in the bodies of healthy women.

Lactobacilli are best known as bacteria eaten in yogurt, but a different strain lives in the vagina.

They're essentially little machines that constantly manufacture hydrogen peroxide and lactic acid, two chemicals that kill infections, including HIV, Hillier explained.

Not all women have these lactobacilli, because the bacteria is washed out by douching. Hillier studied 600 women in a Seattle clinic and found women most likely to have the disease-fighting bacteria were white non-smokers over age 19 who seldom douche.

The 275 women who did have the good bacteria were much less likely to have any vaginal infec-

Board refuses restriction on sex education in schools

Associated Press

TOPEKA - The State Board of Education rejected a conservative board member's push to restrict sex education in public schools to lessons on abstinence.

With a 6-3 vote Tuesday, the board refused a request by board member David Gilmore of Olathe to even study the issue. Instead, the majority said teaching human sexuality should be left up to the state's 305 individual school districts

"If a child makes a mistake, I don't want them to die from it," said board president Kathleen White of Prairie Village, who favors the current policy. "If we can do anything to prevent that, I think we should."

But board member Steve Abrams of Arkansas City said the board should at least look at other programs to see if they are more successful at lowering the number of sexually-transmitted diseases and pregnancies among teen-

Kansas' current sex-education policy was adopted nearly a decade ago. It allows districts to teach about abstinence, stds and alternative forms of birth control.

Gilmore's proposal would have taken the emphasis off of AIDS education and placed it instead on abstinence. It also would have required schools give parents written notice before the class so they can preview the course materials.

'Obviously I'm disappointed, but I'm not going to pursue this any further," Gilmore said.

After hearing more than an hour of testimony, mostly against changing the current sex education policy, board member Harold Hosey of Emporia said he does not know of any school district that does not already teach abstinence as the best means of avoiding sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy.

He also said most districts confer with parents on the human sexuality courses they teach.

"Why would anyone on the state Board of Education not want to cover something comprehensively? Do we take that approach on history or math?" said Denice Bruce, whose son is in kindergarten in Wichita.

Planned Parenthood lobbyist Douglas Johnston of Wichita chalked Gilmore's efforts up to creating an election issue for future board cam-

"It's a typical tactic of rightwingers. They're pushing their radical agenda against the needs of the majority ... He wants a platform to spout these misperceptions," Johnston said of Gilmore's request for a study ses-

Graves proposes transfer of ag-marketing program

Associated Press

TOPEKA - Two cabinet secretaries Tuesday defended Gov. Bill Graves' proposal to transfer a program that assists farmers in marketing their commodities from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Commerce and Housing.

Agriculture Secretary Allie Devine said farm marketing programs will receive greater visibility if they are handled by the Commerce Department.

"Take agriculture and put it with the other industries," she told the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Under the proposal, eight members of the Department of Agriculture's marketing staff would be transferred to the Department of Commerce and Housing, and another six would be eliminated.

Graves proposed the change in an executive order that will take effect on July I unless either the House or the Senate adopts a resolution rejecting it.

Devine said public health and safety and consumer protection are the top priorities for her department, not marketing. On the other hand, she said, the Department of Commerce and Housing has topnotch professionals trained in selling various Kansas products both nationally and interna-

Fort Riley: 'Home of America's Army'

staff writer Since 1955, the signs that greet people entering Fort Riley have read "Home of the Big Red One," but due to changes on post those signs will be changed today to "Home of America's Army."

Fort Riley is undergoing a number of changes as part of the U.S. Army downsizing from 12 to 10 divisions, and the name change is one aspect.

When Headquarters Company 1st Infantry Division relocates to Germany, it will also take the Big Red One name. There will still be a brigade of Big Red One soldiers on Fort Riley," Deb Skidmore, media relations director at Fort Riley, said.

The 1st Brigade of the 1st Infantry Division will remain at Fort Riley, but Skidmore said, "We're losing the 2nd Brigade of the 1st Infantry Division, but in it's place we're receiving the 3rd Brigade of the 1st Armor Division."

The 3rd Brigade is originally from Skidmore said the 937 Engineer Group would also remain at Fort Riley. The impact of downsizing is evident at Fort Riley in the decreased number of soldiers at the post. "When all of the change came about, we had 15,000. When it's all said and done, we will have 11,000," Skidmore said. "We're pleased to have the 11,000 troops.

Skidmore said the post will spend $93 million on what are referred to as quality of life upgrades.

These upgrades include a new commissary, housing upgrades, barracks upgrades and a new sports arena.

The lack of barracks space had been a problem at Fort Riley before the changes

They are moving some of the barracks around because units have departed, so there is more room for the soldiers," said Staff Sergeant Toby Harris, Brigade Schools 2nd Non-Commissioned Officer.

Harris said soldiers can now live in accordance with the new Army barracks

The policy states soldiers should only be forced to live two per room, and in some cases Fort Riley was exceeding that limit, Harris said.

"I was in a room with three people. Now I'm in a room with one roommate, and we have our own shower and toilet," Specialist Richard Cooper of 2nd Brigade said.

'We've got a nicer set of billets."

Harris said he believes the new living arrangements are important to the sol-and that's boosted morale quite a bit," he said. Cooper said he is not excited about all the changes. "I don't use the commissary," he said. "As for the gym, they got enough for everybody." Skidmore said some funds are also being used for a new railyard, which will help deployments run more smoothly.

As many things continue to change at Fort Riley, Skidmore said the mission will remain to train and prepare for possible deployments.

There will be a ceremony in preparation of the 1st Brigade Headquarters

BSU Big 8 Conference begins today

Scott M. Ladd

Black History Month strikes the campus with full force at the end of the week as an annual conference draws more than 800 people to workshops and guest lectures.

The 19th Annual Big 8 Conference on Black Student Government, "Reunite, Restructure, Revolution ... The Time Has Come for Change," will be Feb. 15-18.

"I'm just really excited. Everything is coming together. People are so excited to be coming, and they're calling all the time."

Bailey, who has attended the Big 8 campus-hoping conference in the past, said planning the conference is different from attending it.

"I've attended other conferences but never planned one," she said. "In our planning and action, we are trying to keep together. We had some long hours, and we had a goal. We pulled together." Not only has unity been drawn from the plan-

"I guess because when I look at the conference logo, I feel like I could be in that picture," she pointed to an image of two African Americans in traditional garb holding hands. "It's about change, a plan for the future and for success." Issues to be discussed include academics and retention, political awareness and mobilization, and the upcoming elections.

"Universities have been predominantly white, and are not historically seen as black colleges," said Jawwad Abdulhaqq, sophomore in political science and program coordinator. "We are also having workshops on affirmative action, revolutionary leadership, HIV/AIDS, internal racism, womanhood, alumni relationships and a workshop for greeks," Abdulhaqq said.

In addition to the workshops, students will be able to register to vote.

During the course of the Black Student Unionsponsored conference, speakers will present topical discussions ranging from the Million Man March aftermath to empowerment strategies to radical coalition strategies.

Speakers include P. Eric Abercrumbie, E. Faye Williams, Kwame Turé and Joseph C. Mitchell, he Lafene faces privilege-fee increase depending on result of SGA vote

Heather Hollingsworth

If a $20 increase in the student health care privilege fee does not receive a vote of approval by 40 senators tonight, Lafene Health Center may be forced to charge for doctor visits and reduce services. The bill requests an increase in the user fee from $70 to $90 per semester.

If the bill is passed, Lafene will be required to cut back its budget by 3 percent in addition to a $20 increase.

The increase is needed to compensate for the $2.4-million reserve fund, which has been rapidly depleting since the user fee was reduced from $80 to $70 in 1994.

If the privilege fee remained at $80 per semester, Lafene could have operated until the year 2000 without asking for an increase, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said.

When the fee was reduced, Senate mandated that Lafene use up the reserve, maintain services and grow to some degree, Zweimiller said.

"I still don't feel like they understand and I don't know if this is just me - what happened with the reserve and why we are needing a substantial increase in Lafene is not because we have increased services that much or we have increased cost that much," he said. "In fact, Plan B is a 3-percent decrease in overall cost. But that reserve got

Play depicts life of Martians

Nikki Prentice staff reporter

Aliens will invade Nichols Theatre this weekend to observe the current concerns in American life in "Tales of the Lost Formicans." The cynical, yet touching, play by Constance Congdon will be performed by the KSU theater depart-

Kate Anderson, director and associate professor of theater, said the play is about an alien culture examining a contemporary Colorado family. The play also makes assumptions about America as the Martians observe this normal family.

The family members are very confused about life, Anderson said.

"The characters are out of control. They are afraid. They always are asking 'Who's in charge?' They want to go home, but maps don't help. They don't understand they are on a journey," Anderson said.

The actors play both the family members and the observing aliens. The aliens take the stage when the actors wear mirrored sunglasses.

The audience has to understand the characters are aliens when wearing sunglasses. The play can be confusing and a little scary," Anderson

Eric Stonestreet, senior in sociology, plays Jim, the father who dies from Alzheimer's disease.

"Jim is pretty confused about the world. He used to see it pretty simple before his disease. He sees the world in his own reality, but not everyone else's reality," Stonestreet said.

Evelyn, played by Jill Huguet, is Jim's 55-year-old wife who is struggling with losing her soul mate and establishing a new life after he dies.

"Evelyn is like the old cliché woman of the 1950s. She's a homemaker and isn't respected by many people, including her daughter. She's always trying to keep order and learns she can't," Huguet, graduate student in art and theater, said.

Caisha Williams, senior in theater, plays Cathy, Jim and Evelyn's daughter.

"Cathy's a 35-year-old mother going through a metamorphosing period, struggling with her divorce and father's disease," Williams said. "She understands the pieces of life aren't fitting together right but doesn't understand why she can't control the problems."

According to Williams, Cathy's character is very human and down-

"I hope people in the audience will identify with Cathy and realize there is light ahead; it just takes lighting the candle," she said.

Cathy's son, Eric, a 15-year-old teenager, is struggling with his parents' divorce and moving. Aaron Crispin, senior in radio and television, plays Eric and said Eric is just another person affected by his grandfather's sickness.

The reserve was rapidly depleted, and student health services planned to end the fiscal year, June 31, with about $326,000 in reserve.

The Special Task Force on Counseling and Student Health had recommended, "At the close of any given fiscal year, the unencumbered reserve remaining in the student health restricted fee account should be no less than 26 percent of the prior year's operating budget.'

tied.

The $20 increase in the privilege fee was only one of three proposals presented to the Privilege Fee Committee and the Committee for the Campus.

Schedule A would increase the student health care privilege fee to about $105 per semester and would be a 2-percent increase in Lafene's current operating budget.

It would provide for the same staffing and same hours of operation.

Schedule B, the schedule the Privilege Fee Committee and the Committee for the Campus recommended, would increase the student health care privilege fee to $90 per semester and would decrease the budget by 3 percent.

Lafene would begin closing its doors at 7 p.m. on Monday through Friday, and Saturday hours would remain the same from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Also, Zweimiller said he would leave three of four positions unfilled.

One of the vacancies, a physician, would be filled with a physician's assistant.

Finally, user fees for auxiliary services like X-rays, physical therapy, lab costs and the pharmacy would increase by 10 percent. "We have increased the user fees to what we think students can afford," Zweimiller said. "We are afraid if we take on any more, then no one would be able to afford it.' Schedule C would increase the student health care privilege fee to $80 per semester and decrease the overall operating budget by 8 percent. The schedule would further reduce operating hours, staffing and services.

The physician position would remain unfilled. Lafene would cut back drastically on health education, and the nutrition program would be eliminated.

Also, the two half-time graduate student athletic trainers, who take care of recreation injuries, would be eliminated.

Counseling service would lose 10 percent of its operating budget, which would amount to about $40,000 budget reduction, Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said.

The governor is proposing a mandatory 2.5-percent salary increase, which would mean Newton would have to come up with $50,000, he said. Most of the Counseling Services budget comes from salaries. The actual operating budget was only $9,000, Newton said.

Permanent employees had to have a year's notice before termination. Newton said.

Newton said his only option would be to get ride of his interns, who spend a year at K-State.

But this would cause Lafene to lose its accreditation by the American Psychological Association, Newton said.

"I don't have any place to go. My hands are tied," Newton said. Zweimiller said he was particularly reluctant to experiment with office-visit charges to compensate for the loss of revenue caused by schedule C or lower. Office visits are currently free.

"Right now there's no cushion," he said. "It's a big chess game with lots of unknowns.

Lafene has about 33,000 office visits per year, which accounts for 65 percent of the student population.

"If we instituted an office visit charge, how many students would come in?" Zweimiller said.

Newton also said he was against the implementation of user fees.

Counseling Services charges $10 for psychiatric evaluations and charges for counseling services after the fifth visit, Newton said.

Student health services is funded completely by the student privilege fee and user fees. "If it's just a small amount, like $5,000, I could probably absorb it, but I can't absorb a C schedule or less." The potential cutbacks has had a demoralizing effect on staff, Zweimiller said. "I don't want people to think the health center wasn't managed well," he said. "There are extenuating circumstances beyond our control.'

Opinion

WANTED: STUDENT OPINIONS

The Kansas State Collegian is hiring students as editorial board members. Members are required to come to editorial board meetings at least twice a week and write at least one editorial a week. The position is paid by written editorial, and all majors are encouraged to apply. Fill out an application in Kedzie 103. Please include writing samples and/or resume

Do you have an opinion to share? Send a letter to the editor by e-mail or snail mail at Kedzie 116, Attention: Stephanie Fuqua.

Someone doesn't get the facts straight, and a story is printed with incorrect information.

Then the editorial board of the newspaper gets full of righteous indignation. "How can they do that?" we shout to ourselves, and then we write a scathing editorial about it.

And we're wrong.

This happened Tuesday when a series of mistakes from both reporters and editors caused us to get the wrong facts in the story and editorial about fees for off-campus users of the campus computer

At this point, all we can say is we screwed up, and we are sorry. While some people may not believe this, we do not intentionally print wrong facts in the Collegian, and we try to correct the errors when we do. We know when we do not get the facts right, it weakens our credibility, and all we can do is apologize and print the correct facts.

The Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning was asked to look into the dial-in fee proposal. Vice president Elizabeth Unger was brought to the Faculty Senate meeting to answer questions and address concerns about the proposal.

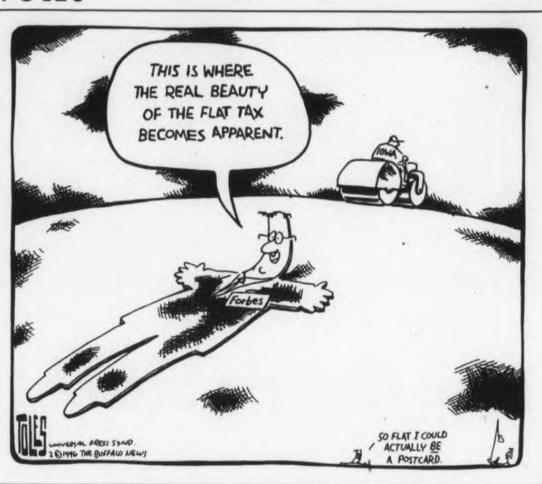

The proposal was brought to Faculty Senate from the K-State administration, not for their approval, but as information. The proposal was not written by Senate, and Senate has no control over

Faculty Senate did not bypass Student Senate with this decision, as was stated in the editorial, because the proposal was never theirs, it was the administration's.

Besides being dead wrong, our editorial created unnecessary conflict between Faculty Senate, Student Senate and students.

We apologize for the inconvenience this has caused students and faculty.

VALENTINE'S DAY NOTHING MORE THAN PEER PRESSURE

Valentine's Day - "the big day", according to the Collegian; the day where millions of Americans rush out to their flower and candy stores, spending a week's pay on stuff to impress their sweetheart.

Why do so many of us choose to do this? Flowers will eventually die sooner or later. Sending flowers seems to send the message, "I love you so much that I'm sending you an object that will wilt and dry out." How's that for a symbol of love? That's certainly not the message I want to send my special valentine. Candy will soon be eaten, cards will be filed away. Sending that stuff is also not very original. If I was a female who received flowers or candy I would think, "Gee, he loves me just as much as those other 50 million guys love their valentines." My suggestion is to make a miniature Valentine's Day every day of the year. If you value your time with your loved one, this should be no problem.

You don't have to spend $50 to show someone you love them.

I can tell how desperate someone is by how much money they think they need to spend to gain someone's attention. The sad thing is that some women actually encourage it. I wouldn't want my girlfriend spending her hard-earned money on something for me. Problems really start occurring when guys don't have the courage to say, "Hey, I can't afford this, but I feel obligated to be like everybody else."

It's also an occasion for women to be jealous of each other. To me, it just sounds like too many headaches.

ACT IS NOT ABOUT VIOLATING FREE SPEECH

Editor,

The Communications Decency Act is not about violating free speech. It is about protecting children from the negative influences on the Internet. No one complains about the fact that you have to be 18 to buy a pornographic magazine, and if there were ways to keep people under 18 from accessing pornographic sites, then I would have no problem with getting rid of the act.

The only way possible to screen children from seeing these sites is to purchase a screening program. Although I have never seen how they work, I am sure that they do not screen everything. I do know that, like any program causing unwanted results, they can be deleted.

Children, in many instances, are more able on the computer than their parents are, which means that the only way to leave it up to the parent to keep their children from accessing the sites is to watch them every moment they are online, and sadly, most parents are not willing to do that.

The Communications Decency Act is not a violation of free speech. The Communications Decency Act is a way to protect children from the negative influences that the world so often provides them.

Liberals lack tolerance

f you take words for their literal meaning, I am a part of the Religious Right.

First impressions are beginning to form. I can almost hear the wheels turning and the comments being whispered under breaths ... Bible beater ... Southern Baptist racist redneck ... gun-toting David Koresh-wanna-be ... religious fanatic ... Fred Phelps fan club member ... door-to-door-bothering Jehovah's witness ... abortion doctor murderer ... narrow minded, brainwashing Sunday school teacher ... Rush Limbaugh ditto head ... street-corner soap box preacher ... stupid bumper sticker-having, cheesymusic-listening-to old youth group leader trying to relate to kids at least half his age ..

..but I am none of the above. I am religious. I believe in God. I read the "Bible" (as a historical, literary and spiritual masterpiece), and I try to adhere to its philosophies.

I am right. I would never have an abortion; I would never consider homosexuality as an alternative lifestyle; I don't favor welfare or entitlement programs; I believe in the right to bear arms, and I will most likely vote for whomever the GOP decides to nominate as its candidate.

Yet for some reason the way the words "Religious Right" roll off the tongues of the more liberal sector of society makes the hair on the back of the my neck stand up. It is like they just bit into an apple with a worm in it. They are saying "Religious Right," but it seems they are thinking, "That guy wants to convert me to Christianity and turn me into a homophobic just like him."

That is the way I see it, but it seems when the words religious and right are uttered anywhere in the same breath, negative images automatically arise: "Fat, rich, old men sitting around trying to figure out how to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, trying to beat us over our heads with their morality..

'You can't legislate morality," the popular liberal battle cry goes.

Oh yeah. Why not? If you can legislate immorality, why not morality? In fact, last time I checked you could legislate anything the majority wants to legislate. It's called a democracy. That's the way things

For a democracy to work, there must be four things: tolerance, active participation, access to information and support of the system. If you don't believe me, ask any political science teacher.

Liberals seem to have the active participation and access to information part down, but when it comes to support of the system and tolerance, many seem to forget the rules of democracy.

First, let's take tolerance. Conservatives have long been accused of being intolerant of the left side of the spectrum, but in reality, we aren't intolerant. We are just trying to get our hierarchy of needs met the best

narrow-minded, second-class citizen. Second, let's look at support of the system. Most liberals support the system when it is going their way; but when they aren't getting their way, they pout, complain and claim they aren't getting treated fairly.

If the truth be known, I just think the reason liberals use such an acrimonious tone when referring to us is because they are jealous Republicans took over Congress two years ago and are looking forward to the presidency.

Access the Future fund pays for SGA to lobby legislature

L. L. Livengood staff reporter

Student Governing Association members will lobby state legislators today against financial-aid cuts and qualified admissions along with other proposed bills outlined in a 32-page booklet.

This is Student Senate's second trip to Topeka to lobby state legislators. The first trip was Feb. 8.

Traveling expenses for the lobbying trips will be paid from the $8,000 remaining in the Access the Future fund

The Access the Future fund was developed from a 50-cent overcharge in student fees in 1994.

Student Senate allotted the Access the Future program more than $12,000 in spring 1995. There was about $8,000 left over from the fund at the end of the semester. Senators allowed the excess $8,000 to be carried over to this year, Student Body President Jeff Peterson said.

The money is being applied toward accomplishing the program's goals of maintaining an open-admissions policy among Kansas universities and fighting tuition increases, Peterson said.

Peterson said he has no problem funding the SGA members' travel expenses out of the Access the Future fund because they are lobbying against open admissions, which is one of the issues the fund is based on.

A bill for qualified admissions was sent to the House of Representatives for debate Monday.

"The bill will be beneficial by first improving education at the highschool level, and in turn improving education at the college level," Rep. John Ballou, R-Gardner, said.

Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, said he disagrees.

"Ultimately, I don't think it's going to benefit the university system or Kansas," he said.

Ballou said the bill will make students work harder to get to universities.

"Students can still go to a community college, and after they get the required hours, can automatically go into a university," Ballou said.

But Reardon said he feels the bill will shut the door on poor kids and develop an elitist system.

"Who's going to be excluded are poor kids," Reardon said.

If the bill is passed, it will result in even less minorities, and the state is at appallingly low levels now, he said.

Those in support of the bill say Kansas is the only state without some sort of qualified admissions, Reardon

"I think a more accurate term is restricted admission," he said.

Ballou said he did not think the bill would decrease university enrollment because it does not take effect for four years. The first to be affected will be upcoming freshmen in high school, he said

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said Senate will be working against the bill and will be deciding within the next week what actions it will be taking.

Peterson said his focus is on the Kansas Board of Regents meeting today, where he will present student views to the Tuition Fees Committee and the Budget Development Committee.

Peterson's trip will also be paid for by Access the Future funds.

The remaining money will fund trips to other Kansas communities to promote community awareness about qualified admission and tuition increases.

"We speak to community groups to educate and share our views with citizens of Kansas and gain their views," Mike Zamrzla, former Access the Future program coordinator, said.

Baseball Wildcats to finish 2nd in Big 8

Myview

SHANA

Newell

I'm pretty darn excited about the prospect the Wildcats have to win the Big 8 title this season.

With a 42-9 shelling of its opponents last weekend under their belts, the Cats, 2-0, are primed to take on tougher foes.

Although the Cats have lost catcher Chris Bouchard, center fielder and speedy base-stealer Tim Decker, and pitchers Larry Walty, Adam Novak, and Jon and Dan Albrecht, they have found themselves filling the holes with experience and new faces.

Jason Bichelmeyer, a heavy bat, transferred from Wichita State and looks to add some meat to the line-up as either a first-baseman, left-fielder or designated hitter.

Junior-college transfer Paul Cranford as catcher, and Fort Scott Community college transfer Frank Gappa also add some weight to K-State's roster, and experience in the field.

Looking intra-state rival Kansas, State's chances in the Big 8 seem even better as Kansas showed poorly in its first tournament appearance this season in Grand Canyon, Ariz.

Crucial losses this season for the Jayhawks were found everywhere. Former coach Dave Bingham departed the Hawks' staff and was replaced by former Iowa State coach Bobby Randall, forcing the team to take a step backwards.

Pitchers Jamie Splittorff, a 1995 first team all-Big 8 member, Robert Keens and Dan Rude departed the Jayhawks, leaving them with a youngpitching staff. Their returning leading pitcher is left-hander Linus Williams.

Also missing in the Hawks' line-up will be left fielder Brian Turney, rightfielder Josh Igou, and third-bagger Brent Wilhelm.

Also seeing playing time in Arizona were the Oklahoma State Cowboys, perennial Big 8 champions. For the 15th consecutive season the Orange and Black claimed the crown of the conference after losing in the first round to K-State.

Look for the Pokes to struggle this season as they try to adjust to some heavy losses.

Adjustment will be all that is expected however, as Coach Gary Ward returns five position players and introduces the nation's 10th-rated recruiting class to the Big 8. Like the Cats, the Cowboys will be iffy in the one starter and have no veterans in the

The Cowboys have already started its season in the hole as they went 1-2 in the desert last weekend, falling to New Mexico State and Grand Canyon University, but pulling a victory out over Loyola-Marymount.

Speaking of the Sooner State, the Oklahoma Sooners will have a struggle if their first three games are any indication. The Sooners are 3-0 for the season, but take a gander at these scores. Look even closer at who they're against. Missouri Southern, Emporia State and Oklahoma Baptist University all suffered losses at the hands of the Sooners, but it was no thanks to the pitching, or in the case of the Hornets, their bats. The Sooners won 13-7, 3-0 and 12-10 in each of the games respec-

And what about Iowa State? It'll be tough, but shaky. With the loss of coach Bobby Randall to Kansas, the Cyclones will be looking to maintain some stability in the program.

With an impressive postseason performance at the Big 8 tournament last season, nearly toppling 14time defending champion Oklahoma State, the Clones have five starters returning from the field, and last year's young pitching staff has returned with experience and growth under its belts.

Nebraska could be a contender if it can recover from the loss of two of last year's top draftees in outfielder Darin Erstad, the No. 1 pick, snagged by the California Angels, and right-hander Alvie Shepherd, who was picked No. 21 and is now with the Baltimore Orioles. Up the middle, the Huskers are in experienced as four of their starters have also left the program.

Missouri, like the Cats, returns a majority of its players, and adds power to the line-up with the addition of pitchers Jay Bell, Matt Podjenski (out of Hutchinson Community College) and Steve Brewster. Outfielder William Mosely is also expected to have an effect.

So, what does the finish look like from here?

A little blurry to say the least, but I'll take a stab at the final rankings.

Oklahoma will finally dethrone the Pokes and claim the title for themselves. But K-State will offer some stiff competition as they come in a close second. Oklahoma State falls to third in the conference but still retains enough power to finish above lowa State, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas respectively.

The road less travelled Former reserve has found starting niche on the Wildcats' women's basketball team

t's been a long road for K-State junior post Andria Jones. And for the first time in her career, she's not moving down that road for the time being.

One of five freshmen during the 1993-94 season, Coach Brian Agler's first players at K-State, Jones earned one start early in the season but averaged just 4.9 minutes per game. When two other members of her freshman class and one sophomore transferred, Jones almost went with

"I thought about it. When you come from high school and play a lot, it's hard not to be on the court," Jones said.

Jones averaged 17.5 points, 7.7 rebounds, 4.7 steals and 4.6 assists in leading Buckeye Valley High School to district and league championships as a senior.

"As a freshman, you don't really expect to play a lot, but it was disappointing to hardly play at all."

Jones become one of the Wildcats' top reserves as a sophomore, averaging 5.7 points and 4.7 boards per game. But she still wasn't reaching her potential.

Until this year.

Jones, a full-time starter for the first time, exploded for 29 points against Lamar in the Cats' second game of the season, nailing all 13 of her free throw attempts.

She has since recorded 26 points against Colorado (Jan. 7) and 20 points at Memphis (Dec. 2).

What turned a five-point-pergame reserve into a 13-point-pergame force?

"I just knew I had to step it up," Jones said. "I had the same ability then that I have now, but I've improved mentally.

"And once you've had a good game, it's easier to do it again. You know you can score 20 points because you've done it before. When I'm not having a good game, I just try to think back on what I did before."

But Jones' production was cut in her three years as a Wildcat. be frustrating, Jones said it was also short last Friday night. On the Cats' first possession, Jones sprained her ankle following a score in the lane. She has yet to return to the court, and likely won't return until the me Feb. 25 in Lawrence "It's frustrating more than anything, because I've never really been injured before," Jones said. "All through high school I only missed a couple games from the flu, and I haven't missed a game yet in college due to injury." Although riding the bench might encouraging Friday to see her team pull out a win over Nebraska, a team that had dominated the Cats in a 12point 61-49 in Lincoln.

"Friday night I was proud of

"With Carlene (Mitchell) and myself sitting on the bench, everybody stepped up that needed to - I might be important, but they don't need me to win' The Cats sit at 12-13 with four games left before the Big 8

Tournament in Salina, mirroring K-

State's 13-14 and 14-13 records of the last two years. So with one more year of eligibility left, Jones said her goal, and that of classmates Kjersten Larson and Missy Decker, is to leave K-State with at least one convincing winning season

"We've been here and been through about a .500 career. We want to leave not just a mediocre team," she said.

"And with the Big 12 starting next year, we just want to leave our mark.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Unknowns abound for Royals' coaching staff

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Manager Bob Boone has been running all winter, and he hasn't chased down any answers yet.

"There are so many unknowns," the Kansas City Royals manager said as he headed for Florida to await the arrival of pitchers and catchers Sunday for the start of his second spring training. "I went jogging this winter and kept running more and more miles because I couldn't figure it out. So much is going to be predicated on how guys do in spring training. They'll win jobs at virtually every position."

Ask Boone what his batting order looks like, and he'll tell you he doesn't even know where his players will play.

Boone's rookie season as manager began with an oddball spring of replacement players, and then started over with the real deal. Now he must deal with budget cuts.

Boone's entire infield was sent packing including top run producer Gary Gaetti - and he has a rag-tag pitching staff. Last year's Royals scored the fewest runs in the American League, and his homerun hitter took advantage of the drawn-in fences at Kauffman Stadium by hitting all of seven - and spent about as much time driving between Triple-A Omaha and Kansas City as he did looking at big-league pitching. His catcher was let go last year because he cost too much and now is back after a sub-par year with the Red Sox.

What's a manager to do?

Grin and bear it, and maybe see if he can use more lineups than the 127 he used in 144 games last year.

"It's going to be much like replacement ball," Boone said. "We've got a bunch of guys we've got to look at. Our coaching staff is going to have a lot of hard work."

Gone is the infield of first baseman Wally Joyner, shortstop Greg Gagne and third baseman Gaetti, who led the Royals last year with 35 homers in the most productive year of his career, now in its twilight.

Second baseman Chico Lind took himself out of the picture when he left the team without permission in June. He never returned.

Boone is not quite sure who will man the

Also in the mix is Jose Offerman, whose horrible fielding had the Los Angeles Dodgers throwing their hands up in fright before they gave up on him.

Kevin Appier is back to lead the pitching staff. His 15 wins actually were a disappointment after his 11-2 start, and his awkward pitching motion has many wondering when his shoulder is going to go out. He'll be followed by Mark Gubicza, the last holdover from the Royals' 1985 championship team, who can be counted on for innings and probably 10 victories. Then it's Tim Belcher, whom Boone is also counting on to throw a lot of innings, and Chris Haney, who missed all of last season with a serious back injury. Gone is the inconsistent Tom Gordon.

Hipolito Pichardo, who pitched out of the bullpen last year, may be the fifth starter. They'll be throwing to Mike Macfarlane, the Royals' other homerun threat. He signed a free agent contract with the Red Sox last year but is back after one season. The Royals retained closer Jeff Montgomery, but otherwise the bullpen is an unknown. Most of the Royals' young talent is in the outfield: Michael Tucker, Johnny Damon, Jon Nunnally and Tom Goodwin.

Doubles team stepping into national spotlight

John Berggren

With two consecutive losses against Northwestern Creighton, you wouldn't expect the K-State No. 1 doubles team of Karen Nicholson and Yana Dorodnova to be ranked 35th in the ITA national tennis rankings.

Tennis coach Steve Bietau said his team's slow start was due to a lack of good execution on the basics of the game.

"They have been simply struggling to win the serve and are not returning enough balls," Bietau

The No. 1 spot has been up for grabs since last fall's Big 8 Championship No. 1 doubles team member Karina Kuregian was diagnosed with Graves' disease.

'Yana and Karen have started playing No. I because with Kuregian's illness, she hasn't been a big factor on her doubles team with Lena Piliptchak. Even when Kuregian is healthy that doesn't mean Yana and Karen won't still be No. 1.

"It shows a lot of team depth when we could have two different doubles teams playing at the No. 1 spot," Bietau said.

Dorodnova said she was enjoying the stiff competition between No. 1 and 2 doubles and said the team that advanced the most would hold the No. 1 spot at the end of the season.

"I like the pressure," Dorodnova said. "We have a very good No. 2 doubles team, and the competition is good for both teams. It helps both teams when trying to improve."

"It will depend on how much we improve and how much they improve as to who will be No. 1 at the end of the season," she said. "It's a good feeling to be at No. I and we'll try our best to stay at the top spot." The Dorodnova/Nicholson duo is in its first season of action as an exclusive doubles team. "We didn't play doubles all fall semester and now we're trying to start and improve this semester and the next one," Dorodnova "I'm glad to be playing with Karen and work with her on tennis. I think we have a good chance of being good, because we communicate good, and that is important for a doubles team."

Nicholson also said the camaraderie between her and Dorodnova was a key to their team's play.

"We get along real well and we enjoy playing together, especially when we are playing good," Nicholson said. "I think that is why we could be good, and we're playing better than we have been."

Both women have definite goals on living up to their No. 35 rankings.

"We want to make as much progress as possible, be No. 1 on our team and try to win all of the rest of our matches," Dorodnova said. "We also want to win the Big 8 and qualify for the NCAA tournament." "I want to be more consistent at the foreman spot and on my returns," Nicholson said. "I want us to stay confident and give, 100 percent and beat some higher ranked teams."

'I am not Kevyn Jacobs'

A lot of people get us confused. I don't know how many times I've been asked "Hey, aren't you Kevyn Jacobs?"

Now when people ask "Don't you write for the Collegian?" I often reply "Yeah, but I'm straight." I feel weird saying that. If I don't, I get an earful about how gays are sick or some guy starts flirting with me.

So let us compare and contrast Kevyn and me. We both work for the Collegian. We're both tall. We're friends. We both wear Birkenstocks. We both need to lose weight. We're both good writers. We both favor gay rights, although we disagree on many of the details. We're both older students (I'm 25, he's 27). After that the similarities pretty much end. They would tell you, for one thing, I'm married and straight. Really. Please, you guys out there, I'm as straight as an arrow. I'm flattered, but flirt with Kevyn or someone else instead of me from now on. He's bisexual, not me.

Kevyn is taller than I am by about three inches. He has an even greater diameter than I have. He has blue eves and a beard. I have brown eves and a goatee.

Kevyn is a lot more liberal than I am. He considers himself a communitarian, as in "Are you now or have you ever been a communitarian?" His middle name might as well be Pinko.

My politics put me slightly to the left of Jack Kemp and in step with guys like Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. I'm not a Republican because I have this crazy notion of the separation of church and state in my head.

Kevyn knows a lot about movies. I rarely go to movies. But I'm a walking encyclopedia of popular musical knowledge (as well as of a fair share of classical music). Kevyn's interest in music is not as great.

Kevyn uses computer technology well. He helped me create my home page on the World Wide Web and wrote a Collegian article on how you can do the same. He, along with Kady Guyton, work hard everyday to make the E-Collegian as great as it is.

I, on the other hand, know more about computer-type stuff than a lot of people do but have a lot more to learn before I'm up to Kevyn's level of knowledge.

Kevyn watches soap operas and debates with the women of the newsroom which male celebrities are cutest. I don't. Why not?

Because I'm, as one gay friend of my wife's said about me, "hopelessly hetero." My heterosexuality prevents me from being the best judge of how cute men are because I don't really know what makes one man cuter than another. I don't even think about it. I just defer to Kevyn and the women. Remember that.

While Kevyn wrote mainly about queer issues in his opinion page columns, I wrote and continue to write about those issues and many, many others. Because I'm straight, well, I just don't have the credibility Kevyn has to write about queer issues all the time. After all, why not let Kevyn, the bisexual one, write about his life experiences while I, the perfectly happy straight guy, write about queer issues as well as other things?

Now that you know some more about Kevyn and me, you can appreciate our differences, which are many, and our similarities, which are few and rather superficial.

I hope I straightened some things out for you.

on the first floor as it is today. But, the hospital became a burden following a health-care revolution that took place in the 1980s. The insurance industry and Medicare became reluctant to fund long hospital stays in the face of rising medical costs, Zweimiller said. "They started moving away from hospitalizing people as much as they had," he said

"Prior to the 1980s, for example Blue Cross, Blue Shield (Blue Cross & Blue Shield Association) said you had to hospitalize or we won't pay you, we won't reimburse you. So then, hospitals started building, adding on - adding beds and so forth.

Then Medicare switched to a perspective payment plan in which hospitals were reimbursed a specific amount for a given medical procedure.

"All of the sudden, they had to manage resources better," Zweimiller said.

The change caused hospital closings as the health-care industry adapted to the new system. "Beds were vacant, and hospitals shut down because the whole way of treating patients changed," he said. "The same thing happened at Lafene Health Center and hospital. What was happening out in the greater community was also happening at college cam-

The hospital was closed at the end of December 1987, but the out-patient area remained open 24 hours a day.

The hospital area was renovated and turned into office area, and the Counseling Center, which was located in Holton Hall, merged with Lafene in

The University made the last payment on the renovation loan in 1995. Zweimiller said.

In 1988, rising health costs and a low student health care privilege fee combined to place Lafene in financial difficulty.

The special task force on counseling and student health compiled a report on the health-care situation and asked Student Senate for an increase in the privilege fee.

Senate increased the privilege fee to $75 per semester in fall '89 and $80

Also, a $25 part-time student privilege fee and a $5 per-hour summer privilege fee were implemented.

In 1989, administration began examining the practicality of keeping the health center open 24 hours a day.

Two nurses and an orderly remained in the hospital after the pharmacy closed, and doctors left at 5 p.m. Doctors remained on-call after the health center closed. Patients who came in after 5 p.m. had to pay a $15 after-hours fee and an additional $25 if a doctor was called.

"If you got hurt or sick at three in the morning, you could still get help,"

But only about three to four students were using the service after midnight, and some nights no students came, Zweimiller said.

In 1990 the hospital began closing at midnight, and then by 9 p.m. in 1991.

"I love delivering the flowers. It's great to see someone's day brightened when they open the door and see me," Collins said.

He said it gets hard to stay in a good mood after a day like Valentine's Day when you have to deliver from 50 to 60 flower arrangements.

"It takes a lot of time to deliver the flowers since you have to drive slower to ensure the arrangements stay nice. So by the time I get back to the store, there is a whole new group of flowers waiting to be taken back out," Collins said. "I've been doing this all day, so right now I'm getting real tired."

It was about 3:30 p.m. before Collins was able to stop, take a break and eat lunch. People responed differently when Collins knocked on the door with deliveries.

"I had one guy tell me that I had ruined his day when I brought him roses. I didn't bother to stick around and ask why," Collins said.

Collins said most of the people he delivered flowers to were excited and didn't expect them on Valentine's Day.

One of the deliveries Collins took later in the day brought about an unusual response as the woman saw her delivery.

"Oh great, another plant I'll probably kill," Renee Skala, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop

Floral, said she didn't arrange any orders too unusual this year for deliveries, but she did make an arrangement for two dogs named Brittany and Tasha.

Collins delivered two miniature red roses with two dog biscuits tied to the bows on the vase to Kay Stewart, a Manhattan resident. She was a bit surprised, he said.

"Oh my goodness. Brittany and Tasha are my two German shepherds. My husband must have sent this," Stewart said.

However, after opening up the card, she didn't know the person who sent the

"The card says, 'I woof you. Love, Max.' Who's Max? I don't know who Max is," Stewart said.

To prepare for all the deliveries and in-store business, Westloop Floral hired 20 additional workers, ordered large amounts of flowers and about 3,000 extra roses.

"I have around 10 to 15 people delivering flowers constantly. It gets difficult at times, especially when people aren't home when the flowers are delivered or they want the flowers delivered at a certain time," Medlin.

"We do get some unusual orders that people want delivered when they bring in their own items to include in their arrangements. We've had engagement rings put on bows, and one person wanted panty roses added to his arrangement," he said

Medlin also had to special order tropical flowers from Hawaii for one customer's delivery

Collins said he didn't know when his day delivering flowers was going to end. "I'll be here until all the flowers are delivered and everyone is happy and I have no idea when that will be," Collins said.

Fee sent back to committee

- Conflicting data on Lafene fee causes confusion among senators

Courtney Marshal

Student Senate postponed voting on the proposed student health fee increase Thursday night. Senate was scheduled to vote on the bill that would increase the user fee from the current $70 to $90 per

But because of confusion concerning figures in a memo sent to Mark Tomb from Lannie Zweimiller concerning operation proposals, the bill was referred back to the Privilege Fee Committee for verification.

"I'm just confused. We're getting conflicting information from Lafene." said Russell Fortmeyer, engineering senator, said.

Amy Donahy, arts and sciences senator, strongly urged fellow senators to take this extra week and research the issue.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said he agreed with Donahy. "They need to get numbers that match with each other. I don't know what increase there has to be, but obviously there has to be some increase. We've been operating under a system where income has not been meeting expenditures. I don't care what they come out with, but they're going to have to have some increase to continue services," he said.

Fortmeyer said he fears that some do the needed research to be better informed for next week's vote.

"Sending a bill back to committee is basically to stall. Very few senators do actually research. The majority don't. There are some concerned senators, but some could give a damn," Fortmeyer said. In addition to the Lafene fee increase proposal, senators heard a proposal from Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, and Mitchell Strauss, chair of the Provost's Task Force on Academic Honesty, for a proposed honor system to replace the cur-

▲ County police officer Jeff Hooper responds to a call Thursday afternoon in northeast Manhattan. Hooper said the average day consists of about 160 calls that police officers repond to. All calls are classified as either a routine call, an urgent call or an emergency call.

▶ Officer Hooper investigates a set of fingerprints in the basement of Manhattan resident David Schmidt, right. Schmidt called the police department Thursday afternoon when he returned to his home and found it had been burglarized. The fingerprints were not clear enough to be read accurately because they

But for at least one officer in the Riley County Police Department, there are more important aspects of being a cop.

Patrol officer Jeff Hooper said he dreamed of being a police officer ever since he was young

In 1991 his dream came true, and he was sworn in to the RCPD.

After being a passenger in Hooper's patrol car on a Friday night, I know firsthand the vast difference between a real cop and the glorified fictional characters of the screen.

Of course, real cops do issue parking and speeding tickets, and they may at times do the things television and movie cops do, but they also provide a service most people overlook. They serve the public and protect the peace.

Hooper's shift begins with a briefing in a small room lined with lockers. Sergeant Kurt Moldrup gives instructions concerning the night's duties, and the officers gather their equipment and take to the streets.

The officer must be equipped at all times with handcuffs, a personal radio, baton and pistol, and wear a bulletproof

While this equipment appears cumbersome, it is imperative to the patrol officer.

The patrol vehicle looks like any other sedan from the outside, except for the siren. But inside, a large radio takes up the space between the seats, and a shotgun rides next to the passenger seat for easy access.

The cop car is also loud, with the radio constantly transmitting codes and other information the layperson would never be able to interpret.

Hooper said one of the first things you have to learn as a young officer is the "10 codes."

STATE SENATE

Legislation to protect Kansas River

Associated Press

TOPEKA - Sen. Sandy Praeger, D-Lawrence, brought her little green plastic bucket with her to the committee hearing.

It was filled with what the hearing was partly about - sand from the Kansas River.

This debate is not just about sand and the economics of the availability of sand," said Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, as she plunked the bucket down on Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee table. "This debate is about the Kansas River, which is a valuable natural resource.'

The bill would place a two-year moratorium on additional river dredging operations for a 110-mile stretch along the Kansas River from Lawrence to near Ogden, east of Junction City. During the moratorium, the Department of Wildlife and Parks would conduct a study on potential uses of the river if it were not disturbed further.

Supporters say the dredging operations east of Lawrence have damaged the river's banks. They contend expanded dredging would cause further ecological deterioration of the river, also known as the Kaw River.

Opponents deny dredging has altered the river significantly. They also contend the cost of construction would increase if sand, used in concrete and asphalt, cannot be extracted from the Kansas River.

The House on Tuesday passed a measure that increases the royalties the state receives from sand dredged from rivers from eight cents a ton to 15 cents.

The Kansas River is one of three publicly owned rivers in Kansas. The other two are the Missouri and the Arkansas

All other rivers and streams in Kansas are considered private proper-

 County considers proposal to protect Kansas River

Chris Oakley

A group representing about 400 individuals and businesses met with county commissioners Wednesday to ask them to sign a resolution that would prohibit sand and gravel dredging on the Kansas river.

Tom Hittle, a landscape architect from Manhattan, told commissioners that prohibiting dredging on the Kansas River, also known as the Kaw River, is in the best interests of both the community and the state.

Dredging is the deepening of waterways with various machines using scooping or suctioning devices. The process is also known

"I'm very pro-sand and gravel and very pro-business," Hittle said.

"This moratorium is in the best interest of businesses and families."

"The eyes of 400,000 residents of Kansas who live on the river corridor are all looking to see what we do here today.'

Hittle said there are two ways to attack the dredging issue.

"One is from top-down, the governor, the legislature. The other way of attacking it is from bottom-up. We go to the county, then the county submits their proclamation to the corps of engineers saying they don't want dredging in their county," Hittle said.

Students from Manhattan High School, who are members of the Stream Team, the MHS crew team, told commissioners they want to prohibit dredging on the river.

Charlie Tierney, MHS student and member of the K-State Crew

Team, told commissioners that it is in the best interests of the county to prohibit dredging of the river.

"I know that when the river is dredged, we lose soil from farm land," he said.

Tierney said if the crew team could have events on the river, businesses in Manhattan would gain revenue through lodging and food expenditures. Hittle said he also testified before the Kansas State Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee asking for a moratorium on issuance of sand and gravel dredging permits until a study is completed by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. Edward Moses, a lobbyist for the Kansas River Sand Producers, told the Senate committee Feb. 14 that in the past 150 years millions of tons of sand have been extracted from

▶ ARMY SAYS LEADERSHIP BREAKDOWN CAUSED DEATH OF SOLDIERS

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) -Second Lt. Curt Sansoucie's ambition was to be a general. Instead, within months of graduating from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, he died from exposure in a chilly, rain-swollen swamp.

His family and other relatives are angry and bitter, still questioning how Sansoucie and three other hardy, well-disciplined soldiers could have died a year ago today during rigorous Army Ranger training.

"I'm not going to let this go down quietly," his mother, Theresa Sansoucie, said from her home in Rochester, N.H. "When I wake up in the morning I see my son, and when I go to bed I still see my son. He's with me, not the way I would want him to be.'

Army investigations concluded that the four soldiers who died and four others who suffered from hypothermia were victims of a series of blunders and a leadership breakdown.

The problems were compounded by a Vietnam-era rescue helicopter that ran short of fuel.

▶ STRONG OPPOSITION MAKES YELTSIN UNSURE ABOUT NEXT ELECTION

YEKATERINBURG, Russia (AP) President Boris Yeltsin, ranking low in public opinion polls and beset by resurgent Communists and other hard-liners, said his decision today on whether to seek re-election was far from easy.

If he decides to run, "It would not mean that I will necessarily be elected," Yeltsin acknowledged

Wednesday night as he returned to his wintry Ural Mountains hometown and prepared to make his announcement.

"But we must continue with reforms. We don't have any other choice. There is no road back, and we must finish what we have start-

Yeltsin, who was to announce his decision in a speech here today, has long been expected to run, despite the strong showing of opposition parties in December's parliamentary elections.

The race's likely frontrunner, Communist leader Gennady Zyuganov, was also expected to declare his candidacy today.

▶ JUDGE GRANTS SHORTER SENTENCE FOR FORMER BEAUTY QUEEN

LEWISBURG, W.Va. (AP) -Citing good behavior, a judge has cut a former beauty queen's twoyear sentence in half for trying to kill the parents of a romantic rival.

Wednesday's ruling would make 24-year-old Tracy Lippard eligible for parole at the end of April.

"I suspect Miss Lippard has had enough," Circuit Judge Charles Lobban said in approving a motion to allow her to serve two consecutive one-year sentences

Lippard received the sentence last year for seven misdemeanor convictions, including two counts of second-degree attempted mur-

Prosecutors said Lippard crowned her successor as Miss Williamsburg in February 1994, then embarked on a 250-mile journey to the Lewisburg home of Rodney and Lynn Weikle.

Lippard and the Weikles' daughter, Melissa, had been dating the same man, Todd Scott. Melissa Weikle was pregnant with Scott's child at the time of the Lippard said she went to the Weikle home to confront Scott after he didn't show up at the pageant.

Authorities said Lippard cracked Weikle on the head with a hammer and pointed a gun at his wife. Weikle, a former Secret Service agent, put her in a headlock and disarmed her.

GUNMAN PLEADS INSANITY

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) - When John Salvi III walked into two abortion clinics, pulled an assault rifle from his coat and sprayed hollow-point bullets at anyone in his path, was he a methodical killer or delusional maniac?

That was the question jurors were given Wednesday at the opening of his double-murder

And as they heard a parade of survivors tell the grisly tale of the shootings, what he did was not at issue - but

"This case is not about abortion, but about insanity," said defense lawyer J.W. Carney Jr., who acknowledged his client was the gunman who killed two receptionists and injured five others in 1994.

"It was the plan of someone who was mentally ill and acting on his delusions," he said.

▶ WORKERS FIND CAVE-IN VICTIM

TOKYO (AP) -Vowing to work day and night to unearth a buried bus, workers reportedly found the first body from among 20 people missing in a massive cave-in.

Distraught relatives have been keeping a vigil at the crushed highway tunnel outside a remote fishing village in northern Japan, but no sign of life has been seen since Saturday's accident.

Authorities believe the bus was crushed to a height of about 3 feet when a boulder the size of a 20-story building smashed the roof of the tunnel. If anyone survived, they would now have been exposed to freezing temperatures for five nights.

"I'm so worried, I've become ill," said Toyomi Murakami, 73, whose 17year-old granddaughter, Asami Murakami, was among the trapped. The girl, he told Kyodo News, is "my reason for living."

Million Woman March to occur in mid-June

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Black activists announced plans Thursday for a June rally billed as the Million Woman March but insisted it was not a response to last summer's Million Man March in Washington, D.C.

K-State avoids canceling classes due to weather

Kara Rogers

Classes are canceled.

Students long to hear those three simple words uttered.

Despite wishful thinking, K-State rarely cancels classes.

'Students pay tuition to come get their education. So, we try to keep the University open in order to give them that opportunity," said Tom Rawson, vice president for administrative and Often times, students think classes will be canceled for inclement weath-

"My understanding is there are two different ways to close the University. One is that the governor would declare inclement weather for the state or just Topeka, or include eastern Kansas, which would include K-State," Rawson said.

Gov. Bill Graves has also delegated to President Jon Wefald the authority to close the institution in times of inclement weather, and that decision is made by the president after consultation, Rawson said.

"I think we may have dismissed early a couple of years ago - maybe even longer than that - because of an ice storm, but we rarely have closed the University because of the weather," Rawson said.

Rawson said the University did make a special exception in spring 1993 and canceled classes because of

In relation to bad weather, the decision to close the University is a judgment that is arrived at by the president, two vice presidents and provost, Rawson said.

These individuals consult with the Weather Bureau and the K-State Police in combination with observing the weather, Rawson said.

"One thing we don't do is make a decision based on the next day's forecast," Rawson said.

Tom Simons, coordinator of print media at the University of Nebraska, said Nebraska had adopted the philosophy that the school is like a business.

The weather has to be severe because such a large number of students live on-campus. It is like a business. Businesses don't shut down because the weather gets bad," Simons

The city of Lincoln pretty much has to be shut down to cancel classes, Simons said.

When deciding to cancel classes at K-State, Rawson said occasionally other universities are contacted.

"For example, 10 days ago we had a wind chill that was pretty low, and we did call the University of Kansas. We agreed amongst our two institutions to go ahead and stay open.

"We do occasionally consult other institutions, but that is not our primary factor," Rawson said.

The University of Kansas bases its decision whether to cancel classes on factors such as the current state of the weather, road condition, accumulation of snow in parking lots and whether the buses can safely make it up the hills, said Jeannette Johnson, assistant to the executive vice chancellor at KU.

'We have a program called KU on Wheels. The hill is a big consideration on our campus," Johnson said.

Although these factors are taken into consideration, Johnson said the university has never closed classes because the weather was cold.

Weather is not the only reason KU has canceled classes.

In 1988, the KU men's basketball team won the NCAA championship, and the chancellor canceled classes the following day. "The decision was probably based on the assessment of whether it was likely people would come to classes due to the late-night good comradeship on campus," Johnson said. KU does not have a policy of canceling classes because of a sports event, and each decision is made on a case-by-case basis, Johnson said. If K-State won a NCAA championship, Rawson said that he cannot imagine classes being canceled. "It goes back to the principle that students are here to get their education, and they are entitled to receive that education.

"That is something you should really ask the president.

"Is there a Regent's policy against that? I don't know. They require us to have so many weeks of classes," Rawson said.

In emergency situations such as bomb threats, representatives from KU, K-State, and Nebraska said they take them seriously and evacuate the "When we receive a threat like bomb threat - just the building. The only other reason classes might be canceled at KU is the quick spread of a disease, Johnson said. "This has not happened on our campus, but a quick spread of disease suppose is something that could close classes," Johnson said.

Public outcry will help stop Kaw dredging

QUICKread Companies should stop dredging sand from the Kansas River. Students should attend the Riley County Commission public hearing about the dredging at 6:30 p.m.

Monday.

The Riley County Commission met Thursday to talk about little bits of sand.

The Kansas River has tons of it enough sand to keep thousands of kids playing in backyards for thousands of years. It's cheap stuff, too. It only costs eight cents a ton if you're buying it from

The commission was having an informational meeting to talk about prohibiting sand mining in the Kansas River. The commission will have another public hearing at 6:30 p.m. Monday to talk about banning sand mining on the Kansas River in Riley County.

The river, one of three public rivers in the state, is not being mined in this area right now. Nor should it be.

Kansas has few natural beauties, but the Kansas - or Kaw - River is one of them. People canoe, fish swim, and nature evolves there.

The state is concerned, too. House Bill 2616 would increase the price of sand from eight to 15 cents per ton. Senate Bill 617 would impose a moratorium on sand-dredging permits on the Kansas River for two years so the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks can study the river's usefulness.

Sand mining is aquatic strip mining. The only difference is water will cover

If mining companies want the sand, let them get it elsewhere. There is plenty of sand in this state.

Except for the Kansas, Missouri and Arkansas rivers, all rivers in Kansas are privately owned. There is no reason to allow the destruction of one of this state's most beautiful natural resources.

CANCELING DEMOCRACY

ou and every other Kansan should be mad at Gov. Bill

On Monday, Graves signed into law a bill that undermines Kansas democracy.

This law eliminated April's Kansas presidential primary. Thanks to Graves and his allies in the Statehouse, no Kansan of any political party has any way of using the ballot box to influence his or her party's choice of presidential candidate this year.

Graves' rationales for signing this law were that canceling the primaries would save the state a whopping $1.4 million and that the election results would be, in his words, a foregone conclusion.

Almost everyone knows President Clinton, who faces no serious opposition in the Democratic Party, and Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., a mainstay of GOP politics in this state for more than 30 years, would have carried the Kansas' primaries. And $1.4 million is certainly a nice savings.

These suppositions are irrelevant to

The people of Kansas, especially those Republicans who want to send a message to Dole by voting for other GOP candidates, have no voice and no choice whatsoever in choosing their parties' presidential candidates at all. This situation is undemocratic and un-American to the utmost degree.

Third World dictatorships and military juntas cancel their elections. Governors don't do that Perhaps never before in America has a scheduled election of any kind been canceled because a politician claimed that its outcome was a given or because election expenditures of just more than 50 cents per citizen was too much.

The governor's reasons are hog-There are no good reasons for canceling any popular election, period. Graves has other motives; make no mistake about it. No, he is not trying to save state money; nor is he trying to relieve citizens of the burdens of democracy. He is simply trying to save Dole from getting egg on his face in a contested home-state primary Not that it matters much to the governor, but some Kansans might have wanted to vote for a GOP candidate other than Dole.

For example, their numbers might not be high enough to win the GOP primary, but religious conservatives, anti-NAFTA and GATT forces, populists, anti-abortion activists and United We Stand, America members in Kansas deserve the chance to vote for GOP contender Pat Buchanan as a way to tell Dole that the senator's views and voting record in Congress do not fall in line with their priorities.

Many of us might not agree with those who would vote for Buchanan (or other Dole challengers, for that matter). But in a democracy, they have exactly the same right that you, I and Graves have to vote as their consciences dictate. In fact, it's their, and our, most precious right.

Graves took that right away to save Dole the embarrassment of our votes.

"I just made it clear to the Dole people I'm willing to do anything needed to help the senator," Graves said as he signed the bill into law.

He was referring to his willingness to campaign for Dole in New Hampshire, but he seemed to be offering the true explanation for canceling the Kansas primaries. If canceling the primary was needed to help the senator,

The ink of his signature on the bill wasn't even dry before Graves was in New Hampshire stumping for Dole. It's almost hypocritical for Graves to campaign to help Dole in another state's primary just after divesting his own state of such elections.

Governors should not and cannot be allowed now or in the future to cancel any elections to help the political fortunes of their cronies, nor for any other reason at all.

Arkansas should not cancel its primaries because Clinton, an Arkansan, is running unopposed. Tennessee should not cancel its primaries because GOP presidential contender Lamar Alexander, a former Tennesssee governor and friend of that state's current governor, is a favorite son.

Graves shouldn't have canceled our primary elections either, for any rea-

The governor is doing what will get him a Cabinet appointment, an endorsement for a Senate candidacy or some other political payback from Dole, rather than what is ethical. He knows it, and so do you.

He put his political goals ahead of our rights, circumventing the democratic process in order to help out a political crony.

Graves doesn't care about our right to vote. He proved that Monday. Scott Allen Miller is a senior in

PROTESTOR SHOULD ATTEND K-STATE RODEO

Editor,

I am responding to an article published Feb. 8. The article was about a group advocating animal rights wanting to protest the annual K-State rodeo. Because Scott Gustafson has never been to a rodeo, I would like to bring a few things to his attention.

The rodeo is a place where we can go today and see history. The spirit that the cowboys bring to the sport is the same as it was 100 years ago. Rodeo is the only sport where you are guaranteed nothing. No contracts or sick leave - you won't see a bench at the rodeo. It takes a lot of determination and a love for the sport to stay with it.

Why do we have these rodeos? What good are they? The rodeo is as much a part of our past as Pilgrims. The 1995 National Finals Rodeo seated 17,000 people for 10 consecutive nights. The purse to win was $3 million. This ranked above golf and the Kentucky Derby. Rodeos are put on to make money. It is a good way for organizations to raise money. The Jaycees and county fairs are examples.

One of the animal's safeguards in rodeo is the way that an event is scored. A score is based on a possible 100 points. This is 50 percent animal points. The animal receives a score on how well it bucks. The cowboy wants the animal to buck so he can get a good score. The stock contractor, who owns the animals, wants the animal to buck because the good scores make the animal worth more.

Good brones can be worth $10,000. This depends a lot on the performance of the animal. Animals that suffer stress, sickness and lameness will not buck. This will cost the cowboy and the contractor money.

Participation in the rodeo is a life saver for some of these animals. Many horses have behaviors that will not allow them to be used in the show arena or for pleasure. If not for the rodeo, they would be slaughtered.

Reading the rule book, you will find many rules that govern the animals' well-being. There are rules on the cowboy's equipment and handling of the animal. A $250 fine can be enforced for unnecessary roughness. The flank straps are used help to initiate the natural buck of the animal. These animals have learned behavior. By feeling the flank strap, the horses and bulls know when to buck, and when it is released they know when to

This allows some control over the behavior of the animal by being able to stop the bucking after a ride. Some are so conditioned they will stop after the rider is bucked off, or when eight seconds is up.

I can completely understand Gustafson's right to free speech. If he would like to protest rodeo, at least learn some things about it. False accusations just make you look foolish. I offer Gustafson an invitation to the K-State Rodeo. Please come and observe the sport and the procedures used to handle the animals. Ask questions and read in the program about the rules of rodeo. If you look closely, you will see some good people who are there to enjoy, not destroy, animals.

CHRISTIAN COALITION LACKS TOLERANCE

Editor.

William Thomas Burdette says liberals lack tolerance. As a liberal, my response is simple: I have no tolerance for intolerance. As long as religious rightwingers respect my rights and beliefs, I respect theirs. I may disagree, but I respect them. Liberals don't hate Christians. In fact, many of us are Christians.

The problem is this: Too often the religious right's activities seek to limit or revoke everyone else's legal rights and freedoms; that is, taking away reproductive choice or censoring what we see, read or listen to. Religiously motivated politics too often threaten the basic human rights of women, people of color or gays and lesbians. Why should I tolerate somebody who, given enough rope, would use it to hang me and the people I support?

There is an important distinction to be made here. Even though I despise the Christian Coalition's values, for instance, I don't impose my values on them. I would never challenge their right to worship as they choose. I would never try to make their reproductive decisions for them. But the Christian Coalition can't say the same. They want all public school children, for instance, to pray to a Christian god even Jewish, Buddhist, Native American, Hindu, Muslim and agnostic children. That doesn't fit my definition of tolerance.

My question for the Christian Coalition is this: If your belief system is so strong and true, why does it need to be reinforced every minute of the day? Are you afraid your kids will lose their religion at school if they aren't constantly reminded of it? Will a few naked bodies on cable television undo a lifetime of moral instruction? If so, you'd better reexamine your belief system.

Crime discussion rarely includes poverty factor

n his recent State of the Union address, President Clinton addressed the fact that this country needs to get tough on

You know, though, if any country could be said to be tough on crime, it would be the United States. According to the 1995 edition of the World Count Fact Book, we have the highest percentage of our population incarcerated among western-industrialized countries.

Now I realize some of our punishments aren't as dramatic as caning or chopping off hands, but I doubt this is what Clinton has in mind. Instead, the plan is for more cops, more prisons and longer sentences.

Like many people, I can see the wisdom in punishment being used as a deterrence. As the old saying goes, "Spare the rod and spoil the

The rod, however, hasn't been spared on our society. In fact, it's been used quite freely for some time now.

It is my belief that most good parents, faced with a child who is constantly in trouble, would eventually ask themselves, "What makes my child so unruly? I've tried being strict, but no matter what I do, they misbehave."

At this point two options present themselves quite readily: Try to find the underlying problems the children are having, or beat them harder until they finally submit.

It seems that our government has adopted the latter of these two options, despite the fact that one underlying problem presents itself automatically: poverty.

According to Mike Males and Faye Docuyanan, two doctoral students in social ecology at UC-Irvine, in 31 California counties with a combined population of 2.5 million, zero teenage murders were recorded in 1993.

Is poverty ever addressed when the question of crime comes up? Not many of this country's so-called criminal justice experts do, including James Wilson of UCLA and Princeton's John D'Iulio, who both claim more cops and prisons are the only thing that will bring the crime rate down.

Compare that to central Los Angeles, which has roughly the same population and recorded more than 200 teenage murders in

As Males and Docuyanan point out, these teens are exposed to the same violent movies, TV shows and rap music, but for some reason the kids in Los Angeles kill one another, while their rural counter-

Besides population density, one other important fact separates the two areas. There are more than 200,000 youth living in poverty in Los Angeles County, according to the February issue of the Progressive.

The statistics are also skewed racially. Six out of seven youths arrested for violent crimes in Los Angeles are African American or Hispanic.

Just by chance, this is also the proportion of the city's youth living in poverty who are African American or Hispanic.

Now I could go on and on trying to show you that there is a link between poverty and crime, but I think that that this borders pretty closely to being common sense.

Is poverty ever addressed, however, when the question of crime is brought up? Not many of this country's so-called criminal justice experts do, including James Wilson of UCLA and Princeton's John D'Iulio, who both claim more cops and prisons are the only thing that will bring the crime rate down.

Now this is just a guess, but I actually think doing something about poverty would go further toward reducing crime than a large number of new prisons.

It wouldn't cost a whole lot more, either. Not to even mention the cost of building prisons, keeping someone there cost a good deal more than our yearly tuition at col-

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS NEED LISTENING EAR

This letter is directed to international students and visiting scholars. Welcome to K-State, Manhattan and the United States. I am Ata Karim, a staff member at University Counseling Services. I also serve as the liaison to the International Student Center. I came to the United States for my graduate studies in

Since then, I have had many interesting experiences in this country. I found myself feeling both excited and confused when I arrived. I was excited about meeting new people, seeing new places, being independent and making my own decisions. I learned quickly that adjusting to a new culture, new people and a different way of life can take some time - and it can lead to a lot of stress.

International students and scholars are expected to adjust quickly to their new environment. For most people, making this quick adjustment is not a smooth process.

Many of you will have to fit into the American education system, which may be different from what you were used to in your home country. You may feel uncertain about the social customs. You might find it difficult to approach and talk to people who do not share the same language or customs. You may have many roles to fulfill, such as being a student, a parent and a spouse, not to mention a full-time ambassador from your homeland.

People may expect you to have all the answers about every aspect of your nation. You might have to deal with the stereotypes that people have about your country, religion or cul-ture. This can be both difficult and tiring. You might feel a lot of pressure from all these new demands, and you may even start feeling angry more often.

The pressures may make you feel like avoiding others, or leave you feeling sad, lonely and extremely homesick. You might even become ill more often than before. When these things happened to me, I was lucky to be near caring people who had experience with other international students. They helped me understand that I was experiencing culture shock.

It is nice to have a place where you can bring your concerns about your experience and find supportive friends who have been through the same things themselves. Did you know?

■ The NHL record for the most consecutive shutouts by a goalie is six, set by Alex Connell of the 1928-29 Ottawa Senators.

ISU's Orr worst coach in conference history

As the Big 8 basketball season winds down to an end before becoming the Big 12, it comes time to do some reminiscing.

On January 1, 1957, the Big 8 as it is now known was born. Throughout the 39 years it has existed, there have been many great memories and many not-so-great ones. The Big 8 did not officially have eight teams in its basketball program until the 1958-59 season, so some great names have been eliminated. Here are some of the Big 8's best.

Best Facility - Without a doubt, the best facility in the Big 8 was

Ahearn

House. It housed

the Wildcats from 1950-88 and was the loudest, most exciting place to watch a basketball game. It would be today's equivalent of Duke's Cameron

Field

Myview

CHRIS

Indoor Stadium without the press-May court side. Indiana's own Bobby Knight said, "This has to be the greatest basketball crowd in America." Makes you wonder why we ever left. Best Coach - It pains me deeply to say this, but the best overall coach in the Big 8 is Missouri's Norm Stewart. In his 29 years as head coach for the Tigers, Stewart has a 579-285 record, a 67-percent win ratio. Runner-up for best coach goes to our own Jack Hartman, who for 16 years with the Wildcats created a 295-169 record. (This record does not include his games coached with the women's basketball team.)

Worst Coach - Iowa State's Johnny Orr, selected on the basis of lack of coaching. His assistants did more coaching than he did.

Best Performance by a Coach - K-State's Lon Kruger made a memorable scene during the last game at Ahearn when a dispute over a call angered him and he pulled Missouri coach Stewart down by his necktie to Kruger's level for a little discussion. K-State went on to beat the Tigers, 92-82.

Best Mascot - Two words, TOP DOG. Is this Oklahoma mascot great or what? He can spin his head around, tug on his ears, and if that isn't enough, the name is. As far as worst mascot goes, it's a tie. Chip the Buffalo, Cy (Iowa State's poor excuse for a mascot), and the Kansas Jayhawk. Do they all own the same suit? Cy and the Jayhawk could almost be twins.

Best Performance by a Mascot - K-State's own Willie the Wildcat. Before the 1989 K-State vs. Kansas game in Ahearn - notice how all the good things happened at Ahearn - sports announcer Roger Twibell was live on the air when a roller-skating Willie knocked him over from behind.

Best Season for the Big 8 -1987-88. During this year, the Big 8 had three teams in the Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament: K-State, Kansas, and Oklahoma. Kansas beat Oklahoma in the championship game. In that same year, five Big 8 players were drafted in the first round of the NBA: Kansas' Danny Manning, K-State's Mitch Richmond, Oklahoma's Harvey Grant, Iowa State's Jeff Grayer and Missouri's Derrick Chievous. This year also housed my vote for best players in a given year. On top of the five first-round draft picks, three other players made it into the NBA that year.

And now the All-Big 8 Team: Danny Manning, Kansas; Rolando Blackman, K-State; Mike Evans, K-State; Steve Stipanovich, Missouri; and Wayman Tisdale, Oklahoma. Coaching the All-Big 8 team would be Missouri's Stewart.

And finally, as we close the doors on the Big 8, let's look back at some of K-State's greatest moments in the conference.

Steve Henson scored 41 points at Iowa State to lead K-State to a 93-90 overtime victory on Feb. 17, 1990. In that game, Henson had eight three-pointers, and anybody who saw that game knows some of them were way past the arc. He was a player who had the heart and determination. And whatever happened to his younger brother, Brian?

The 1987-88 team. I've mentioned this team before, but listen closely to what it did. K-State went 25-9 on the season, beating LaSalle, DePaul, Purdue, and finally losing to Kansas in the Elite Eight round of the NCAA tournament. The Cats beat Kansas at home, lost by one point in Lawrence, and beat them at the Big 8 Tournament. Among the leaders on that team were Mitch Richmond, Will Scott, Fred McCoy, Steven Henson and Charles Bledsoe.

Askia Jones scored 62 points on March 24, 1994, in the NIT Quarterfinals game against Fresno State. He set a new Big 8 record for single-game scoring with those 62 points. Jones sank 14 three-pointers, including nine in a row and 11 in the second half.

March 5, 1988. The Old Barn was rockin' one last time as K-State beat Missouri, 92-82, in front of a crowd of 11,850 Wildcat fans.

As the Big 8 doors close on the end of an era, new doors open up to the Big 12. Who knows, maybe Top Dog will get some competition in his category of best mascot. Then again, maybe not.

Chris May is a junior in electronic journalism. If you have any more ideas for the best and the worst of basketball in the Big 8, you can e-mail her at (camay@ksu.ksu.edu).

That's what the K-State baseball team will try to do this weekend as it heads to Colorado Springs, Co., for a three-game series with the Falcons.

■ Guard's inconsistency is not what Kansas fans expected from him

Associated Press

LAWRENCE -Fifth-ranked Kansas is in the middle of a run to bury an opponent, and shooting guard Jerod Haase has the ball and is open for a 3-point shot.

Let's all join Coach Roy Williams and hold our breath. He's been missing all year, and a

Swish And now we

With Jerod, we're 20-2, and without him we all can wouldn't be close. exhale.

ROY WILLIAMS

KANSAS BASKETBALL COACH

Haase's shooting touch has deserted him this season, and nothing is more frustrating for a basketball player. Like a pitcher who can't throw a strike, the harder you try, the worse it gets.

Haase will be widely blamed for Kansas' first Big 8 loss at Missouri on Saturday. The Jayhawks trailed by two in the closing seconds. He was open for a 15-footer but passed it up in favor of a pass under the basket to center Scot Pollard.

It was the wrong decision. The ball was intercepted, along with Kansas' chance of running through the Big 8 undefeated.

He missed a free throw in Kansas' only other loss, to Temple.

But this is a team game, and Williams and everyone else in town wants Haase on his team, even though he's shooting only 38 percent and just 30 percent on three-point tries.

Haase's playing time has diminished only slightly in his junior year even though he is slumping.

The reason? Say you are in an alley, and there is a loose basketball. Your chances are not good if Haase is around. You better be ready to hit the ground if you want it.

"With Jerod, we're (20-2), and without him we wouldn't be close," Williams said.

"If he makes one more free throw in the Temple game ... But you can say the same thing about anybody on our team. If they had made one more we'd have won the game."

Haase doesn't look like much sitting on a bench in an old locker room in that Kansas basketball place called Allen Field House. Listed at 6'3," he's maybe a 6-footer and maybe 180 pounds.

But put him on the court, and see the intensity in his eyes. He is a winner, as Williams knows full well. "That's the reason I came to Kansas," Haase said. "To play in the big games." Haase gets put in the background as his running mate Jacque Vaughn makes the cover of Sports Illustrated, and emerging stars Raef LaFrentz and Paul Pierce get the rest of the publicity.

But nobody on the Kansas team works harder, and the Kansas players know it.

" I have no reservations at all about having The thing I really like him back there, about this team is the Vaughn said. way it has really "The thing I really like opened up its arms about this to Jerod.

be nice if some of those shots would drop. Especially now that March is on the doorstep.

"I'm just trying to relax," Haase

"I'm trying not to put pressure on myself. But it just seems the harder I try, the worse it becomes."

TRACK AND FIELD

Hawks' Haase struggling Invitational only a prelude to Big 8 championships

If you're heading to Friday's K-State/Coors Invitational expecting to see an intense, full-squad competition resembling last week's Husker Invitational or next week's Big 8 Championships, you will be disappointed.

Compared to those two events, this meet will be decidedly low-key, at least if you believe K-State track coach Cliff Royelto.

"Basically, it will be a very low-key meet because everyone's got conference meets next weekend," Rovelto said.

As a result, don't expect to see full squads at the meet, which begins at 2 p.m. Friday at Ahearn Field House. Those athletes who will be in attendance will come primarily from K-State, Kansas and Wichita State, although some will compete with no affiliation, Rovelto said.

About two-thirds of the Wildcat team will compete, according to Royelto.

"Basically, we just want to do things to sharpen up for next week (Big 8 meet)," Rovelto said.

The Big 8 meet will be held next weekend in Lincoln, Neb. Each team can send up to 24 athletes to the meet.

"We'll enter people who we think can score points," Rovelto said. "That may be 24. It may be

One of the goals of the Big 8 meet is qualifying for the NCAA Championships, held in March. Two K-Staters, Vanitta Kinard (triple jump) and Wanita Dykstra (high jump) have qualified, while Itai Margalit (high jump) is likely to go to the meet, Rovelto said.

Rovelto said he thinks several other Cats could qualify for the meet, citing sprinters as one area with potential for producing more qualifiers.

K-State has been host to the largest blood drive in this region.

"Last semester, we regained the traveling trophy from KU for receiving the most units of blood," Gormely said. "The trophy is incentive to donate, but just knowing that you can save someone's life should be the most important thing."

"It takes about an hour to donate a pint of blood," she said.

"It is completely safe, and there is no chance of infections being passed

The most common side effect is the possibility of dizziness.

"We encourage those donating to stay and have juice and donuts to get their blood sugar back up before they leave," Gormely said.

It is University policy that fulltime, classified faculty and staff wishing to make a donation receive two hours off from work.

"This doesn't cut into sick leave or time off," Gormely said. "We just encourage anyone to come in and donate or volunteer.

Anyone interested in making a donation or volunteering at this spring's Bloodmobile is welcome to stop by Derby Hall Monday or the Union Tuesday-Friday.

"We can always use volunteers," Gormely said. "We'll try to find a place for all those interested."

Trial witness charged with lying

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - Ignoring pleas from independent counsel Kenneth Starr, an Arkansas prosecutor says he will file state charges against the government's key witness in the Whitewater trial.

Prosecutor Mark Stodola wrote to Starr to say he would charge David Hale with lying to state regulators about the solvency of Hale's insurance company and other crimes.

Hale is Starr's chief witness at the March 4 trial of Gov. Jim Guy Tucker and James and Susan McDougal. The McDougals were President Clinton's partners in the Whitewater real estate pressured him to make questionable loans from his small business investment company. Both have denied the allegation, and Clinton has never been charged.

The McDougals and Tucker, who had other business dealings with the McDougals, are accused of concocting $3 million in loans from federallybacked lenders to benefit themselves

Starr has urged Stodola not to file state charges against Hale and Starr's ethics adviser, Sam Dash, and even met with Stodola to ask that he defer prosecution.

Federal prosecutors say Hale's pleaded guilty. But Stodola expressed doubt that would really happen.

"I have an honest fear that no guarantee can be given by you that the state's interest in bringing wrongdoers to justice can be adequately addressed during Hale's federal sentencing," Stodola wrote to Starr.

Stodola has until July 6, when the statute of limitations expires. The prosecutor said he would file charges regardless of whether the federal trial for Tucker and the McDougals has concluded.

Starr spokeswoman Deborah Gershman wouldn't comment.

Arkansas Insurance Commissioner state offenses could be considered. Lee Douglass has pressed for two when he is sentenced on federal fraud years to have Hale brought up on charges, to which he already has charges relating to the possible theft

Clinton nominates

alumnus for position in futures-trading commission

Khristi Shell staff reporter

A K-State alumnus is awaiting confirmation from Capitol Hill concerning his nomination by President Clinton for Commissioner of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

David Spears, who is currently the state director for Sen. Bob Dole, was the only nominee to be recommended for the position Feb. 7.

"It's certainly an honor and privilege to be recommended by Senator Dole for the position and then nominated by President Clinton," Spears said. "I look forward to working with the other commissioners."

CFTC is a bipartisan commission comprised of five commissioners, he said.

The commission is the federal regulator of all the commodities in futures and related options market that includes farm goods, metals, minerals in crude oil and financial products such as treasury debt and foreign currencies.

Spears previously served as legislative assistant for agriculture and trade for three years on Dole's staff and for 10 years occupied various positions in the lending division of the Wichita Bank for Cooperatives/Farm Credit Services, where he once was assistant vice president.

Spears said he didn't have a direct interest to get involved in politics right out of college, but somehow his career path or opportunities led him in that direction.

"I spent 10 years in agriculture lending before I joined Senator Dole's staff," he said.

"Certainly that 10 years experience and my education and agriculture background, farm background, were beneficial in that regard, and then that helped lead me to this opportunity."

Spear's co-workers consider him to be someone who is qualified and who will make a real contribution to the commission.

Spears has a great familiarity with agriculture and how it affects the farmers and the rural people, and I think he will take a lot of those realistic concerns and apply it to agriculture and the commodities, said Diana Dooms, regional administrator of Dole's Wichita office.

"With his background in banking and agriculture and the knowledge and experience he's gained of the legislative process, I think he's just a real plus to that commission," said Chuck Alderson, regional representative to

Woman sentenced for death of child

Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio - Maintaining her innocence to the end, a woman was sentenced to up to life behind bars for killing her 4-year-old daughter after the child caught her having sex with a neighbor.

"I've been wrongly accused," Therressa Jolynn Ritchie told the judge Wednesday. "Do not just put me in a corner and allow the person who done this (to go free)."

The jury deliberated five hours before convicting her Wednesday. Ritchie was then sentenced to a term of 15 years to life.

Ritchie's ex-husband, Denton Ritchie, told the judge before sentencing that he suspected his wife from the beginning of last July, when

He then turned to look at his former wife and said, "May God have mercy on your soul, because I have none for you."

Search teams with dogs found the body of little Samantha Ritchie in a watery pit a block from her home. Two weeks later, police arrested attacked Samantha with the cast on her broken wrist and a wrench after the girl found him and her mother having sex. He said he helped Ritchie dispose of the girl's body.

Ritchie and a neighbor, Ernest Vernell Brooks, 43. Brooks testified that Ritchie

Brooks pleaded guilty to abuse of a corpse, tampering with evidence and obstruction. He was sentenced to the maximum five years.

Ritchie also was sentenced to an additional 7 1/2 years in prison on charges including tampering with evidence, inducing panic and abuse of a corpse

Denton Ritchie said afterwards the trial was emotional torture for him but that he was satisfied with this wife's sentence.

"She should have to pay for what she did," he said, "and that helps me

Sounds like a place many students wouldn't mind being come spring break.

However, some K-State students have found an even the Student Governing Association and St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center.

Students have the opportunity to travel to Saltillo, Mexico; Chicago and Appalachian region near Lexington, Ky. They can also get more out of break than a sun burn and a bad hangover.

Brian Buford, senior in psychology, is a coordinator

"Many people come away from the trips with a sense of what is important to them," he said.

Each trip has specific activities, but the purpose of all three trips is to observe a different culture and help others who are less fortunate, Buford said.

Amy Martin is going on the trip to Mexico for the

"I felt like I needed to do more," she said.

"The people try so hard to make you feel welcome." Students pay from $180 to $280 depending on the trip, which covers all food, transportation and lodging, Buford said.

There is also a deposit to reserve places on the trip. Buford emphasized that the trips are multi-denominational, and the participants are generally students.

Eric Sissell, junior in secondary education, went to Chicago last year and is looking forward to this year's trip. "You can get away from the normal spring break," he said. "It's something to do for yourself?" As a part of the trip to Chicago, the students stay in homeless shelter, which Sissell remembers well

The trips last the entire week and include plenty of time for sightseeing and relaxation.

Buford compiled a quote from Marian Wright Edelman, the founder and president of the Children's Defense Fund, which gives an understanding of the meaning behind the three trips.

"I was taught the world had a lot of problems; that I could struggle and change them; that intellectual and material gifts brought the privilege and responsibility of sharing with others less fortunate; and that service is the rent each of us pays for living, the very purpose of life and not something you do in your spare time or after you have reached your personal goals," Edelman once said.

THE CASUAL CRITICS

by Page Getz and Nolan Schramm

"Murder in the First" Marc Rocco, director

Page:  out of five stars

"Murder in the First" was surprisingly not as depressing as the previews painted it out to be, but regardless of any expectations one way or the other, it was still depressing.

Kevin Bacon gives his best performance yet and makes the film, which would otherwise be dramatic, cinematography exploiting the devastatingly inhumane "rehabilitation" of Alcatraz prisoners.

Bacon plays Henri Young, a young man convicted of stealing $5 to buy food for his starving sister from a grocery store that happened to have a post office in it, making it a federal crime.

Christian Slater plays an affluent rookie attorney in the pursuit of justice and in proving his competence develops a passion for the case and goes out on a limb to put Alcatraz on trial.

Bacon and Slater have an odd but intricate chemistry that gives a powerful testimony to the underlying commentary on the subtle rift of class that would prevent them from ever being friends "on the outside," as Bacon's character says it.

Slater's contrived passion in the courtroom scenes are disappointing and unrealistically distracting. Also by the nature of the film, just the predictable injustice of the horrifying torture and air of doom makes you wonder why you'd want to voluntarily subject yourself

Nolan: -1/2 out of five stars

The plot begins with a daring escape by four inmates at Alcatraz in 1938. Two are killed, and one rats on the other so he gets the benefits while Henri Young (Kevin Bacon) is thrown in solitary confinement for three years.

There, he is beaten severely. He makes it out and is beaten some more. So naturally, he kills the fink that ratted on him.

The clincher: Henri's not really that bad of a guy. He took $5 from a general store that happened to double as a post office when he was 11 years of age. He is Hollywood has again distorted the injustice in the American system.

A lazy lawyer gets handed a sure-loss case (e.g., Tom Cruise in "A Few Good Men," Susan Sarandon in 'The Client")

Against all odds, he somehow realizes his full potential. His life comes into focus, and he wins the case. Ho. hum.

Bacon's role as the crazed inmate Henri Young is a well-developed and sympathetic, but enter this movie with the knowledge history has dictated the ending.

"Dead Man Walking" Tim Robbins, director

Page: * out of five stars

It is rare that Hollywood gives birth to a movie that doesn't rely on the standard good guy versus the bad guy motif by allowing the antagonist to cross in and out of the boundaries between victim and oppressor.

"Dead Man Walking" has an unusual ability to stir empathy for both the killer, the victims and the families of the victims, making it difficult to take sides.

Throughout the movie, it is unclear who the enemy is, but the constant theme seems to say more about the compassion of justice entitled to all humans rather than to try to point the finger to right or wrong.

The issue isn't capital punishment so much as it is redemption, with or without religion, the atonement and liberation of the truth, as well as the senselessness of the larger scope that we live in a society where victims become oppressors and oppression is so conta-

The screenplay, written by the director, Tim Robbins, was adapted from the 1993 novel by Sister Helen Prejean, chairperson for the Committee to Abolish the Death Penalty. It was also based on a composite of death row inmates who Prejean corresponded with through the mail.

Another tragedy in this is that Sean Penn wasn't nominated for an Oscar.

Nolan: * out of five stars

Sean Penn plays a death-row inmate (Matthew Poncelet) facing two formidable tasks to avoid execution: angry mobs of retributivists, chanting "an eye for an eye," and election-year politics.

Susan Sarandon, Academy-Award nominee for best actress, plays Sister Helen Prejean. The story is based on Prejean's 1993 book.

The picture progresses through Prejean's isolated, altruistic world. She agrees to be a spiritual aide to a convicted murderer who swears he didn't kill anyone.

Set somewhere in the modern-day South where people still worried about communists, and cops were superstitious, we soon see this sister's heart is bigger than her habit.

Great. That's all we need now to save the ailing plots of today's American movies - a holy Forrest Drawn into an incomprehensible conflict, she soon faces her fawning nature and begins to stand up for what she believes in - the love of a Christian.

When Poncelet's true nature is revealed, she doesn't recoil, but seeks to embrace him with the love of

A touching testament to faith with a wavering plot, this movie's focus is emotive rather than cognitive. Expect to cry.

Artists create jewelry, guitars from metal

Metalsmithing stems from ancient Greek and Egyptian traditions, and last semester K-State Metalsmithing Society began studying it as an alternative art form.

"We wanted to let people know there is a world of art outside of painting," said Lee Hallagin, senior in metalsmithing and history and president of the metalsmithing society. "Anything smaller than a sculpture is fair

Jewelry, wall hangings and even guitars are a part of what develops from metalsmithing.

"It's a chance to see a side of art that you usually don't get exposed to," Ben Schierling, freshman in Last semester, the society made jewelry and art and sold it as a fundraiser in the K-State Student Union.

"We did pretty well," Bill Asmussen, senior in metalsmithing and secretary of the society, said. "We made a little over $425.

Twenty percent of that goes to the society. The rest is given to the artist, Asmussen said.

The society plans for a similar fundraiser during Open House to correspond with demonstrations it will be conducting.

The society is also making plans for "Repair Days" next semester. It is a fundraiser based on the University of Memphis' fundraiser sponsored for its museum of metal arts, Asmussen said.

"People just bring in things to be fixed," Asmussen said.

Jewelry, pots, pans, spoons, table lamps and lawn chairs are all possibilities, he said. "The long-term goal is to have it be as big a thing up here as it is down there," Asmussen said. The society has several plans for the money it raises. Money will go to purchase new materials and tools for the shop, which would be specialty labor and timesaving tools, Asmussen said. Money will also be used to purchase supplies for the demonstrations, he said. "We'd like to bring in several artists that work with metal and have shows or demonstrations," Hallagin said.

The society has 10 to 15-dues paying members and is in its second semester. "We're really interested in getting people in who don't know anything about it," Asmussen said. Schierling said he did some hobby blacksmithing while in high school and stuck with it until he came to college and had no facility to work in. "I was walking in McCain and saw a poster on the wall," Schierling said. He's now been a member for two or three months.

"By being able to interact with them, I've learned a lot about certain techniques," Schierling said.

"We broaden our own knowledge," Asmussen said. "If there's some little tip or technique for doing something, we share it with each other."

Some demonstrations have included techniques for making metal, layering metal and the different effects achieved, and press molds.

Discussions include such things as the small-business aspect of opening and owning an art or jewelry store. The next meeting is Feb. 26. "We welcome students to come in and try it."

Asmussen said.

Track seven, "The Best is Yet to Come," is a fun tune with a taste of calypso. This album is really made for those of you

Railroad suspects sabotage in train wreck

QUICKread

► The FBI is investigating a freight train wreck that injured nine people and left 44 cars derailed. Sabotage is suspected. No arrests have been made.

ST. PAUL, Minn. - Sabotage was suspected Thursday in the wreck of a runaway freight train that slammed into a railyard building, hurling steel wreckage just short of an employee lunchroom and injuring nine men.

"There appears to have been some tampering with the train. As a result, we have called in the FBI," said Dick Russack, a spokesman for Burlington Northern Santa Fe in Illinois.

Russack said the brakes clearly failed, but he would not elaborate on why sabotage was sus-

FBI investigators were on the scene. Special Agent Fred Tremter said Thursday evening that the bureau had not determined yet whether any sabotage occurred.

The train, hauling lumber, grain and other cargo, left a Burlington Northern yard in Minneapolis on Wednesday night, bound for Galesburg, Ill.

It descended a hill into a Canadian Pacific Railroad yard in St. Paul, speeding out of control at 40-50 mph. It crashed into locomotives parked outside a one-story office and flattened most of the building.

The wreckage stopped 5 feet from the lunchroom, said Mike Johnson, a freight car inspector for Canadian Pacific.

He said he was sure people would have been killed if the parked locomotives had not brief, routine stop about eight slowed the train.

One rail worker, Richard Vitek, was pinned for more than two hours beneath a car holding 15 tons of grain. Rescuers working in below-zero wind chills freed him after digging into the frozen ground to jack up the car. He was hospitalized later in fair condition with nothing more than cuts and

None of the other injuries, mostly broken bones and sprains, were believed to be life-threatening. Six men were treated and re-

Russack said the train was inspected and everything checked out fine before it left the Northtown yard. The train then made a miles before the accident site to let another train go by.

'The one thing we know is that the brakes did not have the air pressure they needed. Now, why? We don't know," John Bergene, a Canadian Pacific spokesman, said. Braking power comes from air pressure carried in hoses from the locomotives to the rail cars.

Forty-four cars and six locomotives derailed, leaving wreckage so mangled that workers had trouble telling which cars came from which train. Some cars in the zigzagging wreckage were upside down, some on top of each

"It's amazing there was not any explosion and fire," said Mike

McDonough, a Canadian Pacific electrician.

Rail worker Warren Lear, speaking from his hospital bed, said he and his colleagues were discussing a college basketball game when they heard about a runaway train on a radio. Then came the rumble like "a huge thunder.'

"Everyone ran out," Johnson said. "I didn't know what way to

So he just went down and covered his head. "When I fell, I thought the train was going to run over me," Lear said. "The only thing I can explain is God was with us. I don't know how. It was a miracle." Lear's foot got pinned between a knocked-down wall and the floor.

"All I remember is hitting the floor, and I couldn't move my foot. Then I smelled diesel fuel,' Lear said. It took about an hour for rescuers to free Lear's foot, but he lost his big toe and part of an-

In October, an Amtrak train derailed on a sabotaged stretch of track in a desert gulch near Hyder, Ariz. One person was killed and 78 were injured.

Investigators said a saboteur removed a metal bar holding rail sections together, pulled 29 spikes from the rail and rewired a safety mechanism that would have warned the crew of a break in the track. No arrests have been made.

Aside from this advice, Hooper offered some good insights into the job of a cop, a job he said he has grown to love.

He said some officers are traffic hounds, and they love to set up speed traps and issue tickets, but he prefers to be mobile and ready for any situa-

"I average about five traffic tickets a week," he said. "Some guys will write 20 or 25 a week."

Some people think the cops write tickets for lack of anything better to do, but Hooper said tickets serve a greater purpose.

"We don't write tickets just to write tickets. We write tickets to prevent accidents and injuries. If we do that, we are doing our job," he said.

Despite the efforts of police, rush hour in Manhattan produces some mishaps every day, Hooper said.

You can pretty much count on two to three accidents between 5 and 6 (p.m.)," he said.

While some accidents are minor, Hooper said he has responded to some fatalities. Last year he was the first responder to an accident in which four passengers were thrown from a vehicle, leaving one young man dead and a girl trapped under a car.

The fact that police have to respond to such calls is the reason they may seem different from ordinary

"You're not a cop long before it changes you," Hooper said. "You see things most normal people don't see."

Not all situations are tragic, but Hooper said it is his practice to treat all calls the same.

Whether responding to a domestic violence call or a report of barking dogs, he said individuals who make the call believe their complaint is very important. Throughout the night, Hooper responded to a variety of calls, and I was able to experience some of the frustration and moral victories associated with police work.

A report came over the radio of an individual in Longs Park smoking what was suspected to be a joint.

We arrived on the scene to assist a rookie officer who had already responded to the call.

Both officers were convinced the suspect had been smoking a controlled substance because he smelled like marijuana, and his eyes were glazed and bloodshot.

However, the officers were unable to locate any contraband, and the suspect left the scene of his own accord.

Maybe the suspect would think twice about smoking marijuana again as a result of the incident, or maybe he would be caught next time, but today he got away, Hooper said.

This causes police grief. "You have to realize that you're not going to bust everyone," Hooper said.

At 7:05 p.m., Hooper responded to a 10-47, non-injury auto accident, with a possible 10-46, driving under the influence, in the parking lot next to the Varsity Theater.

An officer already on the scene suspected the driver of one of the vehicles to be driving while intoxicat-

Field-sobriety tests and a breathalyser test confirmed the suspicion. The suspect was brought to Riley County Jail for further testing, and an intoxilizer test determined the exact degree of his intoxication.

This is a victory for the police, but the arrest is only the beginning of the

The arresting officer is required to fill out no less than five pieces of paperwork, and Hooper said this process can take between one and one and a half hours for an experienced officer.

While the suspect's blood-alcohol level was only slightly above the legal limit, Hooper said he estimates 80 percent of traffic fatalities result from drunk driving.

Hooper issued various other tickets throughout the night and responded to calls ranging from noise violations to abandoned vehicle reports.

It is not the type of glorified work you would see on Columbo or Miami Vice, but Hooper said he prefers his job to investigative work.

He said investigation is important and has its place, but he likes the rush of being the first person on the scene of an incident.

"I like to be able to respond to a situation immediately," he said. "I may not be able to change the world, but I can make a difference in a community like this."

MORRISON

The 27-year-old from Jay, Okla., learned he tested positive for HIV just before Saturday's scheduled Las Vegas fight against Arthur Weathers. Morrison said he had no symptoms and had received no notice from previous sex partners to indicate he might have the disease.

He spent the past week calling former sparring partners and sexual partners, encouraging them to take an HIV test. So far, none of them, including his girlfriend, have turned up positive, he said.

"My prayers go out to them nightly and their families that somehow everything will be OK," Morrison said.

The announcement of Morrison's positive test Monday prompted boxing officials nationwide to call for mandatory HIV testing.

But the national Centers for Disease Control have received no reports of HIV transmission through athletics, spokeswoman Michele Bonds said.

But any time bodily fluids are exchanged, there is a risk of transmission, she said. CDC studies of the NFL show the risk in that sport is extremely low.

While boxers are more likely to be bloodied during competition, "it would take quantity and duration" of exposure to the virus for possible transmission, she said.

As far as requiring AIDS testing for boxers, the CDC encourages any precautions and education that could help reduce the risk, Ms. Bonds said.

We feel the risk is low, but we need to make that risk even lower," she Morrison said he endorsed mandatory HIV testing.

They'd be crazy not to," he said. His last boxing opponent, Lennox Lewis, said despite a bloody battle in October he was not worried.

"I heard different reports that I should get tested and there was a risk of me getting it," he said in a conference call from Jamaica.

"I really didn't let that bother me. There were no cuts on my side in the fight. I didn't bang heads with him. The fight wasn't really a clinching fight. It was more at a distance. Although there was a lot of blood, it wasn't on me."

Morrison was suspended from worldwide boxing after the positive HIV test in Las Vegas.

He pronounced his boxing career over Thursday and said he plans to pursue AIDS awareness activities.

"I will have scored my biggest knockout ever" if by speaking out he prevents another person from contracting the disease, he said.

"I've been turning negatives into positives my whole life. This is just a bigger negative," he said.

His promoter, Tony Holden, and his trainers stood by the boxer's side as he made the announcement. His parents, sister and girlfriend also were

"I'm sorry that I've had to drag you through this," he told him. His mother buried her face in her hands.

Morrison said he plans to work with Los Angeles Lakers star Magic Johnson, who also has the AIDS virus, on education and awareness activities. After speaking with Johnson about the illness, Morrison said he does not consider it a death sentence.

Morrison said his lifestyle typifies that of many of his generation who believe AIDS is limited to intravenous drug users or homosexuals.

"I've made a lot of mistakes in my life. However, if getting up here today, confronting this problem out in the open, can get just one person out there to take a more responsible attitude toward sex, then I feel I would have scored my biggest knockout ever."

problems have arisen.

Moses also said the bald eagle population along the Kansas River is increasing, often nesting near dredging pits.

Hittle said there are no companies dredging in Riley County, but there are various companies dredging on the river in other counties.

"In the future, who knows what's going to happen? We have a very good opportunity to be proactive rather than reactive," Hittle said.

Allowing the river to be dredged would hinder recreational use of the river and would harm migratory birds who use the shallow sand bars for feeding, he said.

He said recreational uses provide economic benefits to the city and county through the sale of gasoline, lodging and other camping and fishing supplies.

The Kansas River is one of three public-owned rivers in Kansas. The other two are the Arkansas and Missouri rivers. Other rivers and streams are private property.

The shallow sand bars along the Kansas River forced many settlers of Kansas to make their home in the Kansas City area instead of following the river into Manhattan.

"Had it not been for shallow river bars prohibiting a certain steamboat from accessing it, we would certainly have a different Riley County and Manhattan today," Hittle said.

Commissioners will have a public hearing at 6:30 p.m. Feb. 19 in the Riley County Commission "Process wise, I feel we shouldn't react today," Commissioner Chairman Russ Frey said.

"I support the idea, but I think what we ought to do is take it to an open meeting and allow proponents and opponents to speak," he said.

Commissioner Karen McCulloh said she supports prohibiting dredging on the river but wants to hear more from the public. "I totally support this concept. My name is on the petition," McCulloh said.

Senators viewed a video of the University of Virginia, which has had a tradition of a successful honor system that holds individuals responsible for their own honesty.

Strauss said changing to an honor system would give K-State the opportunity to form a culture of respect and honesty.

"This system requires you to take action, and that's hard," Strauss said. If the current system is changed, all tests would be on file in the library for students to access.

"You have an opportunity to leave a legacy to support a system like this," Strauss said.

Office of Affirmative Action works to dispel myths, explain role

BIII Bontempo

staff writer

About 35 students from various schools met Friday with officers from K-State's Office of Affirmative Action to discuss the role of affirmative action on college campuses as part of the Big 8 Conference on Black Student Leadership.

Clyde Howard, director of unclassified affirmative action at K-State, began the discussion about restructuring affirmative action by trying to dispel some of the myths about the issue. Howard said the biggest myth is affirmative action makes companies hire minorities. But he said there are no quotas.

"As it relates to education, affirmative action has sought to push educators to look for students where they may otherwise not look for students," he said.

Howard said the practice of hiring less qualified people on the basis of their minority status does not occur as the result of affirmative action.

"Affirmative action seeks to find people who are equally qualified and give them an opportunity to compete on an equal playing field," Howard

Danielle Dempsey-Swopes, director of classified affirmative action at K-State, agreed with Howard.

"There aren't any quotas, but there are ways of monitoring progress," Dempsey-Swopes said.

Dempsey-Swopes, spoke briefly with the crowd concerning recent affirmative action court decisions and how they affect the goals of the office at K-State.

In the Adarand v. Pena case in June 1995, the Supreme Court ruled that federal affirmative action programs using race when awarding construction contracts are subject to strict

But she said nothing in the court's decision was anti-affirmative action.

Contrarily, the court's decision left the idea of achieving diversity open, which is the goal of affirmative action, she said.

Howard and Dempsey-Swopes urged the audience to educate itself further about affirmative action issues and to become politically active in this

COLLEGE OF ARCHITECTURE

European travel lends architectural experience

Choices are a part of college life, but for fourth-year architecture students, the choices become very spe-

These students have to choose between spending a semester in Italy, spending 30 weeks interning or attending classes at K-State.

Those who have chosen the Italy studies program in Castiglion Fiorentino said they wouldn't trade it in for the world. "It's the best experience - the best thing I've ever done since I've been at this University," Mike Voegtle, fifthyear architecture student, said. The Italian program, which started in spring 1990, has continued to grow for the past six years.

The students go through a review process, and if far more students than space allows are interested, a formal application process is put in place, said Richard Forsyth, director of the Italian Studies Program.

Students must apply and have their academic standing reviewed, he said. "It's not an automatic if-you'vegot-the-money, you-can-go thing,"

Forsyth said. The 39 students in the program this semester are required to pay $5,600 in program fees which pays for travel, room and board, insurance, library fee and faculty support, Forsyth said. The students are also responsible for paying K-State spring tuition through the Division of Continuing Education off-campus cost for 15 credit hours which is $1,185, Forsyth said.

In addition to general K-State financial aid to help students, the program has its own scholarship and work-studies program, Forsyth said.

The Italian program offers $300-$800 scholarships to comprise the $2,000-$3,000 offered by the pro

There are 10 to 12 formal field trips in addition to the two long ones,

"Emphasis is really on getting out and experiencing the country," Forsyth said

Both Counts and Voegtle took advantage of being overseas to get out and explore Europe after completing their semester's work.

"I took a quick trip around Europe, spending two or three days in each place," Voegtle said.

Voegtle said he was traveling with his girlfriend on his three-week trip when she met relatives she'd never known before Counts said a friend and he were traveling together and each picked three cities they wanted to go to.

Dublin was on both of their lists, he said, so they hit most every town in between.

Counts said their month-long journey took them to places such as Berlin, Copenhagen, Amsterdam and Paris before they Newsprint prices result in proposed fee increase

QUICKread

The Privilege Fee Committee decided to continue reviewing the proposal of raising the Student Publications fee for another week before making a recommendation to Student Senate

Jill Story

Board of Student Publications representatives met Sunday with the Privilege Fee Committee to discuss activity-fee allocations for 1997 and 1998.

Ben Clouse, chairman of the board's Finance Committee, presented a proposal asking for a 24.26-percent increase that would raise the allocation from $275,748 to $342,651.

Clouse said the fee increase was needed to make up for inflationary changes and increased newsprint

"What other business do you know that has experienced a 65-percent cost increase in one of its largest expense items?" said Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc.

The Collegian spent $89,800 for newsprint in fiscal year 1994 and $97,904 in fiscal year 1995. The cost for newsprint for fiscal year 1996 is projected to be $124,338.

To offset the cost of rising newsprint and other expenses, the Collegian reduced its press run from 17,000 to 11,500 during the past several years.

The proposal booklet stated there were about $26,434 in increased newsprint costs, which have been absorbed in the budget during the past year. • See FEE Page 8

Some people think of pizza delivery as a job for the lazy - driving around town all night, listening to the radio and taking a hot pizza or two to a hungry, poor college student. But nine pizzas, two hours and a quarter of a tank of gas later, a pizza man's Friday evening isn't close to being through. 'It's a good job," said Tom Parish, Manhattan High School senior and Pyramid Pizza deliverer, at 6 p.m. on a Friday. "It's pretty enjoyable, and it doesn't seem like a pain usually, but it can get so hectic. 'Tonight, I need to make some money because I'm broke, but if you're just not in the mood to be driving around, it turns into your job, and it can get really old really quick," he said.

Money was one thing Parish said he counted on to motivate

"It's good money with the tips, but you can't count on that give you a tip." Strangers, on the other hand, often prove to really because anybody who's your friend won't be the place to look for bigger tips.

"Once I delivered a pizza and the lady asked me to come in and eat pizza with her and her family," Parish said. " She asked me to have a beer with her, too, but when I told her I couldn't because I had more work to do, she tipped me five bucks and told me to just buy a six-pack. It

Part of the challenge of the job, Parish said after delivering a pizza to Chase Manhattan Apartment complex at 7:05 p.m., was locating addresses of the hungry people awaiting din-

"You get really good at figuring out how addresses work around town, but I "It's good money with still get confused in the tips, but you can't Chase," he said. "Usually I go right to the right apartment, because anybody who's but this time I had to go up and down and around before I got the right one.' Many, but not all, of the problems finding houses

- Tom Parish or apartments are solved by a map in the back of Pyramid for the delivery people. "The map is all right, but it's not that good of one because when you get into places like Colonial Gardens, it really doesn't do you much good. You mostly have to go on intuition," Parish said after backing out of a gravel road that turned out to be a dead end.

With the possibility of not finding the location, getting a pizza to a customer on time is sometimes a concern, he said.

"When we say a time on the phone, we usually give ourselves some extra time, so usually we get there before when we tell them," he said. "But if we're late, and it's not within a reasonable amount of the time we told them, I just try to be nice about it and work it out."

At 7:25 p.m., toward the end of the evening's first busy time, Parish came out with the two last orders, as well as a few dollars richer.

"Well, the lady I tried to deliver to earlier wasn't there when I got there with her pizza. But I guess she just came in, and she just left me three bucks for a tip because she felt bad for not being there when I showed up. That's never happened before — definitely a Pyramid first." At 7:50 p.m., with many pizzas delivered, but with a Friday night still young, Parish looked at the clock, hoping to be able to drive his car in a different direction.

"I'm going camping tonight, so I'm ready to et this all over with and just take off," he said. A few hours later, Parish finally was able to return the pizza warmer and drink carrier to Pyramid, get back in his car and head in his own

The commuter bus was completely crushed when a skyscrapersize boulder toppled off a coastal mountain and smashed the tunnel. A car with a single passenger was the only other vehicle caught inside.

The body of Tatsushi Umemoto, a 20-year-old store clerk who had been headed to work, was recovered Friday.

The impact forced his car into the ground, killing him instantly, officials said.

Most people aboard the bus were residents of the nearby fishing villages of Yoichi and Furubira, tightknit seaside communities where life had come to a virtual standstill since the accident. Despite their grief, friends and relatives said they welcomed resolution of their fears and

He also said he thought not of his slain ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, when the verdict was announced, but of his children.

"I was just trying to tell myself that I had gotten through this. I tried to do it with some kind of dignity, and I didn't want to lose it at that moment," Simpson said.

His comments are contained on a portion of his made-for-profit video. obtained by the Associated Press Friday in advance of its release.

He said he thought one or two jurors might not vote for his acquittal, and this worried him because his chief defense lawyer. Johnnie L. Cochran Jr., had said he could not handle a second trial for two years.

STORM CROSSES EAST COAST

NEW YORK (AP) -Winter's wrath struck again with a mighty snowstorm that walloped the East Coast and parts of the South, causing traffic accidents from Maine to Georgia and blowing down records that had stood for a cen-

Friday's blast made official what fed-up commuters and shovel-weary homeowners have been muttering for weeks: The winter of '96 is the worst they've ever seen.

"I hate it! I hate it! I hate it," Sylvia Pace of Brooklyn said after sloshing across three blocks.

"I can't wait to rake the leaves," said Jim Fiola as he shoveled the courthouse steps in Mercer County, N.J.

The storm was expected to taper off today, with the heaviest accumulations confined to a path along the East Coast. Cold air was expected to hover over the Southeast today, with northern Florida experiencing a freeze overnight.

The snowstorm Friday paled in comparison to January's paralyzing Blizzard of '96, which dumped three feet of snow in many areas. Still, flights at airports in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Washington were delayed or canceled.

Design projects critiqued via the World Wide Web

Students are taking advantage of the World Wide Web to allow to see their design projects.

"People have responded from all over the world," Senegala said.

Students of the design studio had to create and design a structure for the class. Normally other students and architecture professors critic the work of the student. Now, through the use of the Internet, the students can be critiqued from architecture professionals and other people outside of Manhattan

"At a fraction or no cost we can get in touch with some big names in the field," Senegala said.

The sites accessed by students contain explanations of their projects and an animation feature of the architect design.

K-State does not have the proper virtual reality modeling language necessary to run the animation. But, people who do have the language can walk Senegala said this program is very essential for students being able to get their name and work seen in the professional field.

Since the start of the web site at the first of the semester, Senegala said more than 850 people have accessed the site.

"It's extraordinarily beneficial," Senegala said. Senegala said K-State is the second university in the nation to have projects on the Internet.

The University of Miami has also used the Dennis Story, senior in architecture, said he has had professionals from Berlin and from MIT in Boston critique his project.

"The highlight was e-mailing Jaron Lanier," Story said.

Lanier is the creator of the virtual reality glove and mask. Story contacted him while doing research on virtual reality for his project.

Story designed a building on the Kansas River that would help those immersed in virtual reality come back to real reality. The Internet is being incorporated in the professional field, and small firms have already put sites on the web that contain history and designs from their company, he said.

"It's another avenue for exposing your work to the public," Story said.

Rumors tarnishing women's basketball team

One week has passed, and there is still no word. At least, no word from anyone who knows anything. Jack Hartman, interim women's basketball coach, has commented.

Max Urick, athletic director, has commented —

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletic as an entity has not commented, and neither Brian Agler, suspended women's basketball coach, nor Carlene Mitchell, suspended player, have commented. And finally, the NCAA can not comment until the University comments.

How many more weeks does the public have to wait to know why a successful basketball coach was placed on suspension?

The rumors started five minutes after people found out about the suspensions.

We know one reason Jack Hartman was named as interim coach - as a diversion. Newspapers around the state, as well as the Collegian, placed all their attention on Hartman, instead of Agler's probIt's a good tactic. Bring back a fan-favorite and great basketball coach and not say a word about Agler. Nobody has a choice but to pay attention to Hartman, who came out of retirement to coach.

This is not an attack on Hartman at all. He's a great coach. But let's look at the situation.

Hartman has been retired for 10 years from coaching. Hartman has admitted he was not in favor of a women's basketball program when it started in 1970s. He did not know a thing about the assistant coaches or players. He did not know a thing about how those coaches or players work as a team.

If Agler was ejected from a game, would Hartman be called at home or out of the stands to take his place? Doubtful. Why wasn't Kelly Kramer, head assistant coach, named at least interim head

The stated reason has been this is not the time for change for the team, and that everyone needs to stay in their current jobs.

Now is the time for answers. The women's program is being tarnished by the rumor mill, s I write this, Garry Kasparov is playing the last of the six games in his historic chess match against the computer, Deep Blue.

NOTES FROM the underground

Computers already rule the world

Kasparov, who is considered by some to be the best player in the history of chess, lost the first game to Deep Blue, the first time a computer has beaten a grand master in regulation,

The idea of a computer beating a human at chess isn't that strange. Computers beat me at chess all the time. Last year, an Apple IIc put me in checkmate after 11 moves.

I'm no grand master, though, and some people see Kasparov's difficulty with Deep Blue as a sign that computers are poised to take over everything that humans can do.

"I'm playing for the honor of the human race, here," Kasparov said, prior to the game. He also said if a computer could beat a grand master at chess, it would raise serious questions about human superiority over computers, even in such realms as art and

I think it is funny that Kasparov sees computers beating grand masters as the transitional point. After all, it's not like anybody but a grand master could possibly beat Deep Blue. It's just too good.

I saw an article that estimated a player of Kasparov's caliber must have memorized all the information in hundreds of thousands of chess games - something I can't even imag-

So all this historic chess game can prove is that computers can beat freaky humans, who are so far elevated in their ability that they seem like computers.

If Deep Blue doesn't beat Kasparov this year, it probably will next year. Computers keep getting better at stuff, and humans just don't

I know something that Kasparov (or Deep Blue) doesn't know, though: The game is rigged.

Who would benefit from manipulating the results of this chess game?

The answer is simple, but may be startling to most people who don't follow the news

The "person" who has the game rigged is none other than Greenspan-3, the computer that runs America.

Myview

JASON

Not a lot of people know there is a computer in charge of our country, but it's true. In 1957, a computer in charge of automated military response was linked with another machine that kept track of the global and national economy, and the Greenspan-1 was born.

As the years have gone by, this computer has improved itself, staying three steps ahead of the human-run computer industry, and has taken more and more responsibility in the running of the nation. In 1984, Greenspan-3 took full control of the American government, using subterfuge and cleverly placed androids (the Bill Gates, Alan Greenspan and Reganbots have been particularly effective).

Don't panic, though. The computer is not out to enslave or oppress the human population. It has taken control for our own good.

And it's a good thing, too. If Greenspan-3 wasn't in charge, our nation would be run by the people with all the money.

If that were the case, we'd have politicians elected to various posts because of how much money various special interests poured into the campaigns. Instead, Greenspan-3 carefully chooses the right person for each job, and manipulates the election results to put that per-

If the people with the money were calling the shots, we might live in a country where it becomes harder and harder to break out of the lower classes, a country where the poor don't have much of a chance at the American dream. Greenspan-3, however, monitors our lives, and rewards the deserving with lottery jackpots and tax refunds.

If the country were run by the people with money, the federal bank would fix interest rates so that the unemployment rate would stay right around 10 percent (staving off inflation).

Greenspan-3, however, knows that low interest rates and inflation help redistribute money toward the poor, and is moving us toward a more egalitarian society.

Kasparov is right about the art and music, too. If our country was run by money, only financially viable art and music would be rewarded. Television and movies would suck, because they'd be aimed at the lowest common denominator of the audience.

Fortunately, those days are through. Under Greenspan-3, every television and radio station is constantly putting out valuable, entertaining and educational material.

Greenspan-3 has the chess game rigged so that whoever wins, it will be close. The computer is just conceptually preparing us to accept that computers can do everything better, including the running of the nation.

All hail Greenspan-3! Without the computer, our country would be in deep trouble.

ACCESS SHOULD BE FREE

All right. The common word this semester seems to be "fees."

First, we had a problem with the K-State Intercollegiate Athletic Department and Title IX. So, what'd we do? We increased ticket prices.

Second, a committee discusses a $20 increase in the Lafene privilege fee. Most students can live with that, just for the fact that office visits can get expensive, and the total of $90 per semester is actually fairly cheap.

Now, the University wants the students and faculty who dial up to the K-State server from their home computers to pay for access. Most students living in the residence halls do not have a connection to the K-State server like I have. The Department of Housing and Dining Services has an option for residents living in the residence halls to purchase a connection that would connect your computer directly to the K-State server via Ethernet instead of dialing through a All we pay is a one-time fee of $100, and it's good for the entire time I live in the residence halls. In addition, all you need is an Ethernet network card for your personal computer, which will cost you no more than $60. We don't have to worry about a busy signal or tying up the phone lines. Most students do not have that kind of luxury.

Ten dollars for 50 hours of connection time plus 50 cents per hour might not seem a lot of money, but tacking that with the other expenses students and faculty have per month, it adds up. When I chose to attend K-State, I was told by a K-State representative that Internet access would be free. This dialup metered fees starting July I does not seem to be free. Heck, the $100 I paid for my Ethernet connection was definitely not free!

The Internet is a library loaded with information and references that students and faculty need for classes. It should be open to the students and faculty attending K-State, like Farrell Library.

If you want to charge people for access, why don't you do it commercially to people living in Manhattan instead of the students and faculty? People are always wanting Internet access at home. Families are resorting to America Online, Prodigy and CompuServe for access to e-mail, Internet and the World Wide Web. That can get quite expensive, and families are continuing to look for cheaper access.

Students pay enough for tuition, fees, room and board, and books. Some students must pay monthly bills when living in apartments, and students affiliated with fraternities and sororities must pay dues. The idea of paying a metered fee is unreasonable, ridiculous and unfair.

Administration, next time, why don't you bring the proposal to the students and get an opinion from the people who pay to go to K-State? This was a proposal that the students had no voice in.

The birth of my son made me a member of the true leaders of the world - parents. The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world.

The responsibilities begin almost instantly. By 9 p.m., the monitors and machines had all been wheeled away. Family and friends had held the baby, left their gifts, flowers and good wishes and gone home. The doctors and nurses, who had crowded the room earlier in the day to meet our every need, were finished with us. In a dimly lit hospital room, I was left alone with this stranger.

He was not the beautiful bundle of joy I had expected him to be. Babies never look as good as they do on television. His eyes were closed. His skin was red. He had this weird white stuff stuck between his fingers. Even with the little stocking cap the nurses had put on, I could tell his head had that distinct cone shape. The birth had been a long and difficult process for both of us. I was physically exhausted. I was overwhelmed, and I was scared. What was I supposed to do with this little person? Would I be a good mother? Would it all come

I held him like a carton of eggs. I smelled his head. I held his hand and found myself counting his fingers. All there. I looked around to see if anyone was watching. I carefully, slowly unwrapped the blue blanket and counted his toes. All there. I felt a strange sense of accomplishment. I had Until that moment, he seemed like a bundle of unfamiliar flesh.

I called him by name. Months of contemplating had gone into this name, the label everyone would use to identify this person for life. I had changed the name countless times. Whispered names, yelled names, wrote names out and even tried to envision names followed by the phrase - "President of the United States" - until I found a name I would want

But actually calling him by name was awkward. For nine months it was not much more than an uncomfortable lump on my body. In an instant, it was a baby, a person with an identity That ruddy bundle with all his fingers and toes accounted for is now 7 years old. His blond hair and beautiful blue eyes greet me every morning. He has a wicked sense of humor and likes peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. He calls me Mom and doesn't like me to kiss him in public.

We watch cartoons, go shopping, play video games and discuss sports, religion, girls and world politics. More often than not, he has a way of seeing things I would have never thought of, a way of showing me the world through fresh, innocent eyes.

I consider him among my best friends. He has become a person I like to hang out with.

I wonder if I am a good mother. Now I know that nothing about being a parent comes naturally. I realize there will always be times I am overwhelmed by it all. There are still times being a parent scares the hell out of me.

I am doing the best I know how, and I am doing pretty well. We both know I screw up occasionally. We accept each other's imperfections. We share an unconditional love. Being a mother is the hardest job I will ever have. It is the most powerful position I will ever have and has the most at stake. But I would not give up a single minute of it.

A disappointing loss in Norman, Okla., Friday night spurred K-State to one of its biggest wins of the season Sunday in Stillwater, Okla. The Wildcats fell to Oklahoma 62-54 and rebounded with a 70-64 win at Oklahoma State.

At Oklahoma, the Wildcats shot an incredible 5-of-6 from the 3-point line in the first half, with three of those treys coming from junior wing Missy Decker.

Decker's 11 first-half points and a stifling K-State defense that allowed the Sooners just 26.9 percent shooting gave the Cats a 34-24 lead at halftime.

"She's really a great shooter," Sooners coach Burl Plunkett said of Decker. "And in their offense, she's going to get open. K-State is a hard team to defend because they set so many screens both on and off the ball."

But instead of putting the game away, the Cats put the Sooners on the line in the second half.

Pounding the ball inside, Oklahoma found itself in the bonus just 7:03 into the period, while K-State committed 12 of its 15 fouls in the post

"That same pattern hit us in all three games where we picked up a lot more fouls in the second half," Coach Jack Hartman said of his three games as K-State's interim head coach.

of 16 free throws in the second period, with center LaNae Jones and forward Etta Maytubby scoring 23 of their 32 combined points in the second.

But Hartman said it wasn't fouls that killed the Cats. Rather, it was their 7-of-29 shooting performance from the field in the second half.

"I don't care how well you run your offense, teams that don't shoot the ball well go inside to get their points,"

Hartman said. But the absence of junior post Andria Jones, still sidelined with an ankle injury, made that more difficult.

"We can't do that," he said. "One of our better players one of our bigger players — is out, and that hurt us."

Decker, whose 21 points led all scorers, was the only Cat in double figures.

Fouls continued to plague the Cats in Stillwater, where the Oklahoma State Cowgirls were in the bonus just 6:57 into the first half.

That combined with K-State's 34.5 percent shooting, gave the Cowgirls an 11point lead midway through the first half.

But the Cats wouldn't go away quietly. A 17-6 run over the next 6:36 tied the game at 25-25, with the Cowgirls taking a 31-29 lead into

"We were looking for the open shot more instead of looking for the first shot," Decker said of the run. "There counle defensive stons in there a counle steals and we played with a lot more patience."

Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson scored 14 of her 25 points in the first half, including six during the run.

"Brit really did a good job of playing under control," Hartman said. "She has a tendency to put the ball on the

The second half belonged to K-State

Though the Cats wouldn't take their first lead until 14:16 left in the contest, Oklahoma State never led by more than three. K-State's lead reached six with 11:20 remaining, then seven in the final 2:43 on a spinning putunior post Carrie Ragar

The Cowgirls would close to within three twice in the final minute but never got over the hump.

A free throw by Jacobson with 2.9 seconds left gave the Cats their final margin of 70-64.

"Patience and good defensive play won this one,"

Hartman said. "We didn't panic or shoot ourselves out of the game when we were down.'

Jacobson's 25 points tied a season high and led all scorers. Decker added 19, junior post Kayla Hester set a career high with 10 and Ragar tied her career high with

The win was the Cats' first on the road since a Dec. 1 ontest with Grambling State in Memphis. State has lost just two home games this year.

"Any time you go on the road and are able to beat a quality team like Oklahoma State, it's significant," Hartman said. "I am really proud of these girls and the effort they put in."

TRACK AND FIELD

K-State tracksters give taste of future at invitational

Trevor Grimm

The past, present and future of K-State track were displayed at Friday's K-State-Coors Invitational.

The past was represented by several K-State alumni who came up with strong performances at the meet as unattached athletes.

The present was represented by current K-State athletes who have come up big all year, such as Vannita Kinard, who set a personal best in the long jump and improved her chances of going to the NCAA championships in the process. And the future was represented by freshman Renetta Sheiler. Sheiler picked up an NCAA automatic qualifying mark in the weight throw with a distance of 58', 3/4" while capturing a first place finish in the event.

The automatic standards are pretty tough to meet," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"For a freshmen to do it is pretty darn impressive."

But there was more than Sheiler's performance to Friday's meet, which featured athletes from K-State, Kansas and Wichita State, along with unattached athletes.

Several K-State alumni competed in the meet, creating an interesting mix of eras in Wildcat track.

For example, Nicole Green, who graduated last year, captured the women's invitational 400 meter with a time of 54.07 seconds, while Steve Fritz qualified for the national indoor championships with a time of 7.86

"We've got a few of our alumni and a couple of kids on our team who will compete at the USA nationals," Rovelto said.

Although no team statistics were kept for the meet, current K-Staters did not fade into the background at the Karissa Stewart, coming off a long layoff, captured the women's 55-meter dash with a time of 7.12 seconds.

"She ran the 55 for the first time in a few weeks, and looked reasonably comfortable," Rovelto said.

Rovelto also pointed out the performance of Gene Peterson, who set a personal record in the shot put with a distance of 52', 6-1/2"

K-Staters who picked up firstplace finishes on the men's side included Jeff Martin (400-meter, 49.23), Ryan Johnson (800-meter, 1:53.73), Ken Dennard (55 hurdles, 7.95), Ryan Clive-Smith (3,000meter, 8:22.75), Itai Margalit (high jump, 7', 1-1/2"), Marshall Grayson (long jump, 22', 7-1/4"), and Brian Eilerts (weight throw, 46', 2-3/4"). Other K-State first-place finishes on the women's side included Jill Francis (400-meter, 58.99), Irma Betancourt (600 yards, 1:26.32), Sam MacNamara (1,600-meter, 5:05), Leslie White (high jump, 5', 1-3/4"), and Sheiler (shot put, 45', 7-1/4").

The strong performance gives Rovelto reason for optimism heading into next weekend's Big 8 championships in Lincoln, Neb.

"I think we're getting there," Rovelto said. "Our women's team is pretty strong. We've got good people in every area. There's no real glaring weaknesses.'

■ Tiebreakers part of Division I history as NCAA rules to require an overtime period Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The NCAA football rules committee voted Thursday to require a tiebreaker in all NCAA football games.

The rules committee decision came during its annual meeting in Kansas City, and followed a vote of support for the tiebreaker at a meeting of Division I-A football coaches on Feb. 11, the organization announced. The committee was particularly sensitive to the overwhelming mandate of the Division I-A coaches, because the tiebreaker was already being used in other divisions," said Vince Dooley, rules committee chairman and athletic director at the University of

The decision does not require further approval, and takes effect this fall.

The system was used in Division I-A bowl games this past year and is the same procedure used in lower-division NCAA football championships and regular-season league games in the Big Sky, Ohio Valley, Yankee and Mid-Eastern Athletic conferences. It gives each team a chance to score after regulation. The tiebreaker was used for the first time in the Las Vegas Bowl in December, with Toledo beating Nevada 40-37 in the first overtime.

The game lasted more than four hours, but the overtime ended quickly when Toledo needed only four plays to score the winning touchdown from the Nevada had the first possession of overtime, but could manage only a field goal after failing to make a first down from the 25.

Nevada coach Chris Ault said he was happy with the overtime rule despite the loss. "Tie games are a crime in college football," Ault said after the game. "The old guard needs to get off their butts and have tiebreakers in all games.'

The Las Vegas Bowl matched the champions of the Mid-American and Big West conferences.

The tiebreaker has been used once in an NCAA championship game. Allegheny beat Lycoming 21-14 in the first overtime period in the 1990 Division II contest.

"People who have been involved in the tiebreaker report it is very exciting, and it will help resolve problems determining conference championships," Dooley said.

Because ties do not count toward the six-victory requirement for postseason bowl qualification, the change may allow a few more teams to be eligible for bowls, Dooley said. West Virginia coach Don Nehlen, vice president of the American College Football Coaches Association, said Big East coaches were less supportive of the change. "I prefer a sudden-death football game," Nehlen said. "If you put (the ball) on the 25-yard line, the game could go on forever." The overtime system is not sudden death as used in the NFL, and the clock is not a factor.

Each team gets one possession, starting on the opponent's 25-yard line. The team winning the coin toss can choose to start on offense or defense, or it can choose which 25-yard line the possessions will start on. Each team begins each possession on the same end of the field.

A possession ends when a team scores, commits a turnover or fails to convert on fourth down. The game ends when the score is no longer tied at the end of an overtime period.

Any score by the defense wins the game, except the return of an extra-point attempt following a touchdown. A game also ends when a team trailing in the overtime commits a turnover.

Ensemble displays lively strings, musical dexterity

Nolan Schramm

It is peculiar that an 11-piece string orchestra should have only three members sitting; indeed, and only by the sheer necessity of their particular crafts were the harpsichordist and two cellists required to sit.

The violists and violinists from the Guildhall String Orchestra stood on stage in a semicircle, enabling them to easily exchange musical cues.

The group's spirited music was enough to bring smiles to the faces of the performers, surprising in the face of a formidable North American touring schedule.

The distinguished men wore tuxedos, while the women were each dressed in a different color of velvet. Red. maroon, green, blue and purple splashed onto the stage, combining the classical repertoire to create a splendid soundstage and palatable visual experience.

Director Robert Salter, violinist, was superb at leading the orchestra through works by Handel, Vivaldi and Mendelssohn.

At one point during "Concerto Grosso in G Major," Salter and another violinist chorused, producing a pleasant, stereophonic effect.

Equally impressive is the fact that Salter plays a guitar as venerated as Handel's music. It was made by Bernardus Calcanius in 1755.

Hearty applause segued the group into its second selection, "Ulysses Awakes," composed by Englishman John Woolrich, inspired by Claudio Monteverdi's 1640 opera "Ulysses' Return to his Native Land."

Clare Finnimore, viola soloist, drew the crestfallen tones of Ulysses with every movement of her bow in an astounding transcription of the baroque masterpiece.

This piece was written for the viola to sing the soliloquy of Ulysses, who has just returned to his native land to find it transformed by nature's battering hand.

The ensemble continued to exhibit its marvelous musical dexterity with the introduction of classical guitarist Manuel Barrueco, a faculty member of the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore. Barrueco has performed in Alice Tully Hall in New York City, the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., and the Herbst Theater in San Francisco, in addition to regular recitals in Berlin, London, Paris and Vienna, Austria. After brief troubles with the guitar amplifier, Barrueco took his seat at center stage and launched effortlessly into Vivaldi's "Concerto in D Major for Guitar, Strings and Continuo, RV 93.

Through this piece, as well as Giuliani's "Concerto in A Major for Guitar and Strings, Op. 30," Barrueco displayed his technical beauty with precision playing, never wavering, even at notes seven or eight frets apart. Whether many patrons could hear the beautiful playing in the back rows is cause for speculation, because the volume control was set low, and tended to be drowned out by the strings. Perhaps the sound equipment should have been checked more carefully prior to the performance.

Coupled with the spirited, lively strings section, which ten moved from pianissimo to forte in a burst of tightly packaged speed, the ensemble garnered heavy applause at the performance's end.

The ensemble encored with the allegro molto movement of the "Sonata in D," by Mozart. Euphoric and unpredictable as a first kiss, the Guildhall 11 not only brought an evening of magnificent music to Manhattan; they also had fun.

RICE FARMS GET RELIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Department of Agriculture has assembled a $590 million rice program that will hold growers and lenders over until Congress passes

Using his powers under 1938 law, Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman announced a makeshift program Friday that should give close to the same amount of support growers would get if the 1990 farm law had not run out.

The proposed program would rely on loans that growers could use to hold their harvested crop off the market until they can get a good price.

The Royal Purple yearbook will increase in price next year from $21 to $24.95 to increase revenue. Each book costs $43.77 to print.

The difference between what students pay for a yearbook and what it costs to print is funded by advertising sales and activity fee allocation.

The proposal to the Privilege Fee Committee included an elasticity study done by Ed Olson, assistant professor of economics. The study said any price above $24.95 would decrease total revenue earned on yearbook sales.

Privilege Fee Committee chairman Mark Tomb raised the issue of other ways to fund Student Publication's need for an increase in allocations

He asked board members if they had considered other options, including selling faculty subscriptions, requesting help from the Alumni Association, and using revenue from the sale of the Campus Directory, which Student Publications Inc. publishes.

The Privilege Fee Committee recommended a new option that would keep the current amount students pay for the student health privilege fee at $70.

The option the committee will recommend to Student Senate Thursday will increase the budget allocation given to Lafene Health Center by $137,359 but keep the amount students pay at $70 per

"Lafene will be getting more money, but students won't be paying for it," Mark Tomb, chairman of the committee, said.

The option the committee is going to recommend to Senate encourages the use of a user fee.

Tomb said the Student Health Advisory Committee, Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller and administrators would need to decide on what would be funded.

SHAC and Lafene administrators requested an increase in the privilege fee to offset the $2.4million student health care reserve account, which has been depleting since the user fee was reduced in

But Tomb said he doesn't think Lafene needs a 25-percent reserve. account. He said a 10-percent reserve would do the job.

"I feel that we can still provide a comprehensive student health program at a reasonable fee level,"

Craig Korth, freshman undecided, said he attended the meeting to support Senate into moving to a user fee.

"I would rather see a user fee than a forced hike fee," he said. "It gives more choice."

The new option will require a majority vote to pass when it is voted on at the Senate meeting Thursday.

"The most significant goal of the program is to experience first hand another culture - one that has been so significant culturally in art and architecture," Forsyth said.

"I see things now from a different perspective," Voegtle said.

The different culture and language promoted the students' learning

"We were visited by architecture students from Florence who hardly spoke English," Voegtle said. "We could understand their projects through their drawings."

The students were offered a basic language-skills class the semester before traveling to Italy but said they found experience the best teacher.

"The best way to learn is to go out and speak it," Voegtle said.

The students, housed in a renovated convent, had class schedules which allowed free time, especially weekends, for doing outside activities.

> A yellow signal at Kensington, Md., a few miles before the wreck, should have told the MARC train to slow down. There should have been a red signal just before the crossover where the accident occurred.

The 11 bodies recovered from the wreckage were taken to the Baltimore using dental records.

Smialek said blood and tissue samples were taken for toxicology tests, but results aren't expected until Monday at the earliest. The medical examiner's office will also mail samples to the NTSB, which will perform

"Clearly the focus is moving toward the operator since we have found absolutely no difficulties anywhere else." Goglia said.

But the signal cannot be completely checked until the wreckage is removed from the tracks, a process that was continuing Sunday.

The signals are operated by radio from CSX Transportation's central offices in Jacksonville, Fla. The dispatcher on duty at the time of the wreck was coming to Washington to meet with board investigators.

"He is the choreographer of train movements. He has a very critical role and that's why we have asked him to come here," said Goglia, who is leading the investigation.

The three-member MARC crew were among those who died in the nearly head-on crash. They were identified Sunday as engineer Richard Orr, 43, of Glen Burnie, Md.; conductor James Majors, 48, of Linthicum, Md.; and assistant conductor James Ouillen, 53, of Frederick, Md.

Orr was a 25-year employee of CSX, Majors had been with the company 26 years, and Quillen had 30 years of service, said CSX spokeswoman Kathy Burns. CSX operates the commuter rail system for the Maryland Department Transportation.

Also killed in the wreck were eight Jobs Corps workers from Harper's Ferry, W.Va., who were headed to Washington for the long weekend. Only minor injuries were reported aboard the Amtrak train, which was en route to Chicago from Washington.

The crash victims were the subject of prayers Sunday. With President Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton in attendance at Foundry United Methodist Church, senior minister J. Philip Wogaman lamented the tragedy.

"What a tragedy for the young Job Corps volunteers," he said. "Suddenly, their whole future was snuffed out in

One of the victims, Dante Swain of Baltimore, had just passed the last test needed for his high school equivalency certificate.

His parents, John and Marjorie Swain, planned to take time off work this week to attend his graduation ceremony. Instead, they spent Saturday waiting for word of their missing son's fate until a police officer came to their door late that night.

"When he came to the door I knew why he was there," Marjorie Swain, a teacher's assistant, said.

As Goglia described the accident, the MARC engineer hit his emergency brakes about 15 seconds before impact, slowing the train from 63 mph to about 40 mph by the time the trains collided.

The Amtrak train was moving about 30 mph and had just begun to switch to another track. The Amtrak engineer did not apply his brakes, said Goglia, "nor would you want to ... he wants to clear the tracks."

"Put yourself in the (Amtrak) engineer's position: He wants to clear the ... crossover before the lights that are coming toward" him, Goglia said.

Train movement is governed by what are called wayside signals, pairs of colored lights using the familiar red-yellow-green coding.

There is absolutely no indication of sabotage," Goglia said.

Dr. John Smialek, Maryland's chief medical examiner, said all of the bodies had been positively identified

Autopsies showed all 11 victims died of a combination of injuries caused by the impact and the fire that engulfed the MARC carriage, Smialek said. "The majority of them died almost immediately," he said, "All the bodies showed severe effects of the Students contribute to park plans

Landscape architecture interns help plan bike trails, new parks for Manhattan

Jessica White

The long hours landscape architecture students spend in studio may eventually result in new parks and bike trails for Manhattan residents, thanks to an internship program.

Mark Taussig, University landscape architect, has worked with many landscape-architecture interns

He said he usually works with four landscape architecture interns at a time.

The interns mostly do the drawings for Taussig's design ideas, but they may also make suggestions.

"Many of them oftentimes have their own ideas," he said.

Some of these ideas include suggestions on how to improve bike trails on campus.

Taussig said the bike trail project is in its

He said they are in the process of negotiating with Landplan Engineering, a consultant firm from Lawrence.

Research, which would probably include surveys, public hearings and meetings with the city, will be done to find out what discourages people from using their bicycles, Taussig said. The plan is to make it safer to ride bicycles and to form an integrated bicycle network, linking the trails on campus within the three- to four-block area around campus where students and faculty live, Taussig said.

Some proposed plans include increasing bicycle parking, marking bicycle routes on the street, or maybe even creating places where people could go to put air in their tires, Taussig said the bike trail project will be funded by the city/University sales tax fund. Taussig said interns are also working on landscaping for the new Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and expanding to off-campus projects.

Richard Allen, park planner for the city of Manhattan, said the parking lot on Bluemont Hill was deteriorating. Instead of repaving the parking lot, the city decided to create a park with the help of an intern, he said.

"This is a place where people bring people when they first come into town," Allen said. He said the idea was to make a good first impression on visitors to Manhattan.

Half of the existing parking lot was repayed with asphalt, and curbs and gutters were added. These features are used for drainage and to stop cars from driving off the parking lot.

The other half of the existing parking lot was replaced with topsoil and tree planters were added. A sidewalk and picnic tables will also be added to create a viewing park where people can go to eat lunch and view the surrounding area. The park should be finished in

James Wilson, graduate in landscape architecture in December, did his internship for Allen and helped work on the park on Both Schaaf and Schuessler presented ideas on what could be done at Fairmont Park at the Fairmont Park Study Committee Meeting Feb. 5.

The city is considering building a park on the flood plain where Kansas Highway 177 comes into town. The site is just east of the Kansas River and north of the new K-177

Schuessler said the class worked on sketch designs, one of which was for a recreational development plan that could include things like softball diamonds, a recreation center, tennis courts and batting cages. Later he said the students could expand on the earlier sketch projects, with more time for review and more detail.

Schuessler said about five students worked on detailed designs for Fairmont Park, and he and Schaaf were chosen to pre-

REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Dole picks up endorsements from Gramm and du Pont

Gramm gives Dole his support just four days after quitting the Republican presidential race. Gramm's rationale is to divert support from Buchanan. Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. - Just four days after he quit the Republican presidential race, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm endorsed Bob Dole on Sunday and warned the success and image of the Republican Party rested on keeping the nomination from Pat Buchanan.

"I believe that Bob Dole is the one Republican candidate in this race today who can bring together economic conservatives and who can bring together social conservatives and who can make the Republican Party again one united party that is committed to beating Bill Clinton and committed to changing America," Gramm said in delivering his support.

Publicly, party leaders not involved in the race have professed neutrality. "I'm not going to get in the middle," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Saturday when asked about the contentious race. But Gingrich has privately voiced alarm to associates about Buchanan's early strength, and he is hardly a lone voice among GOP establishment figures.

"They are in terminal panic," Buchanan said Sunday, rallying his crowds by suggesting he was coming under attack because GOP establishment figures feared he was about to seize control of the party.

Most senior Gramm supporters among elected Republican officials have quickly rallied to Dole's side. In addition to Gramm, this group includes Arizona Sen. John McCain and Texas Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Yet there remain deep doubts in the party about Dole's strength, with the next 10 days viewed as the crucial test. Dole's backing among senators and governors will be sorely tested if he loses New Hampshire - even more so if former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander fares well. This is an important reason why Dole is closing the New Hampshire campaign with ads criticizing Alexander for taising taxes while governor and for suggesting the state create an income tax.

Dole picked up another endorsement Sunday night from former-Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont, who said the top three candidates in the race were "a protectionist, a moderate and a conservative. Bob Dole is carrying Ronald Reagan's banner in the 1996 election. Bob Dole is the conserva-without mentioning Buchanan, he picked up Gramm's theme that it was critical for the party not to be divided - a remark clearly delivered with Buchanan in mind.

"We have got to bring the economic and the social conservatives together," Dole said. "You can't divide us and expect to win in November."

Gramm had planned to endorse Dole next week in South Carolina. But Dole campaign aides urged moving up the event - even though Gramm had only modest support in New Hampshire — on the belief that every last vote could matter in a tight, volatile race with Buchanan and Alexander. About a dozen prominent Gramm supporters were on hand for the event, many still wearing Gramm lapel pins as they slapped on Dole campaign stickers.

The event also reflected the concern in the GOP establishment at the prospect of a Buchanan victory Tuesday. Buchanan's economic views, particularly his protectionist positions on trade, are out of step with the party's conservative mainstream. And his deep support among social conservatives could mean that a protracted nomination battle involving Buchanan could make it difficult to unite the

NEW HAMPSHIRE PRIMARY

Republicans attack Buchanan

Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. - Even before Tuesday's New Hampshire presidential primary, the Republican establishment had settled on its morning-after goal: block Pat Buchanan.

A crowded primary calendar and a winnowed field should help the man who emerges Tuesday night with that mission. The only question was who would lead it.

"The real race here now is Dole-Alexander," said William Kristol, the conservative strategist and commentator, "No matter how well Buchanan does here, one of those two is still going to look like a much more credible candidate for the general election."

Few Republicans believe Buchanan can win the party's presidential nomination, yet they view stripping him of momentum and the attention that comes with it - as an urgent task. His controversial views are unsettling to most GOP leaders, who worry Buchanan is a threat to the party's chances of beating President Clinton in November.

"They are panicked," is Buchanan's response to such talk. "All we threaten is changing the establishment and making this party more responsive to working people."

That Buchanan was in contention to win New Hampshire at all is a telling sign of how much the race has changed since the turn of the year.

Not too long ago, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole talked of locking up the nomination with a big New Hampshire victory. Now, he talks of just surviving and openly discusses the prospect of losing to Buchanan here.

"It wouldn't be helpful," Dole said, in a considerable understate-

K-State land is center of dispute in Hays

Hiking, biking is banned on research center property

HAYS - Land that once was part of Fort Hays Military Reservation is at the heart of a modern-day skirmish.

On one side are devotees of the outdoors, who want to continue to bike and hike the wooded trails along Big Creek. On the other side is management of the Kansas State University Agricultural Research Center at Hays.

"People were just ignoring them," said Patrick Coyne, head of the research center, so signs were posted recently, warning trespassers of prosecution. Fencing also was added to provide a more effective barrier. Eric Goodman, a Fort Hays State University sophomore from Silver Lake, enjoyed bicycling on the trails and said he was shocked when he discovered the signs and the fencing.

"The enjoyment of the trails is not something I wish to get arrested over," Goodman wrote in "I just want some answers as to why these trails have been

Some clues can be drawn from behind-the-scenes tussle.

Over the years, various citizens have sought to have the trails opened to the public. A new campaign picked up steam last year, with Hays businessman David Meckenstock leading the charge.

Meckenstock was coordinator of the Hays FEET (Friends of the Earth and Environment Trekking) Trail. Community volunteers turned out one Saturday in April 1995 to help develop the trail that Dockery amazed family and doctors by suddenly speaking coherently in an 18-hour period Feb. 11, a day after he was hospitalized for life-threatening pneumonia.

Since surgery last Thursday to remove fluid from his lungs, he has communicated by opening and moving his eyes, squeezing hands, nodding to answer questions and moving his leg and arm upon command.

"He does none of this consistently," Kaplan said. "But I am quite convinced his level of comprehension of what was being said to him was real."

Dockery's doctor, James Folkening, said Monday he asked Kaplan to review the case so more precise information could be given to the public. The hospital has received dozens of calls from researchers, neurologists and families around the world wanting to know more about the case and what it means to similar patients

Kaplan said Dockery's case is isolated and remarkable.

"I'm not aware of anything precisely like it," he said. "It is extremely fascinating."

Kaplan said neurological testing will be conducted once Dockery is moved from the intensive care unit. where he is in stable condition

"The fact that he has spoken implies to me that there are connections in the brain that perhaps will turn on again either spontaneously or under some influences we have not yet been able to ascertain," Kaplan said.

"We'll get him to talk again, or he will get himself to talk again.

Instructional applications for video conferencing, e-mail and the World Wide Web were demonstrated Monday in the K-State Student Union.

The demonstrations were a part of the Provost's Lecture Series, "New Instructional Technologies: A Hands-

A video conference between the Union and Dole Hall was used to demonstrate the usefulness of two-way conferencing in an educational

"You can theoretically sit down and run applications together as if you were all at one table," said Mel Chastain, director of Educational Communications Center.

Sharing applications also makes doing things like creating a comprehensive budget between two different people in two different places easier because users can access numbers and make entries on the same document. Chastain said.

Instructional applications for email and the World Wide Web were also discussed at the fair.

Although some students are initially intimidated by the use of e-mail to receive and turn in assignments, the contribution e-mail has made to the instructional environment has been a positive one, Mark Parillo, associate professor of history, said.

"In the history department, we put a lot of emphasis on writing, and when they put a message out, they are writing and that gives them more experience in that area," Parillo said. Using e-mail also gives the student more access to the instructor, Parillo Even if the instructor is busy teaching a class or out of the office, a student can ask questions or comment on topics that were brought up in class.

"It gives them another way to get in touch with the instructor," Parillo said.

"It also helps them get over the reluctance to come forward with questions that they might be embarrassed to ask in class," he said.

Susan Kraft, assistant professor of clinical sciences, and Jim Hoskinson, assistant professor of clinical sciences, demonstrated the creation of multimedia courses.

They explained how to use a shell, a pre-programmed framework which allows instructors to plug in information specific to their courses and to create courses that use graphics, text and video.

Nothing to do? Go to Aggieville for art films

QUICKread Take an opportunity to broaden your mind, and see an art film. documentary orindependent film at the Varsity Theatre.

Thanks for listening. Students wanted an opportunity to see documentaries, art-house and smaller, independent films.

Bob Howard, city manager for First International Theatres, listened.

The transformation of Varsity Theatre, on Moro Street in Aggieville, into an art house theater, means that critically-acclaimed art films designated for limited release in larger markets will finally be available.

Movie-goers will have a chance to catch movies such as "Leaving Las Vegas" and "Othello" during the films' first runs and prior to the Oscars. Before the rededication of Varsity as an art house, students had to venture far beyond the corner of campus to see such mainstream art film releases.

Now that one of Manhattan's 14 movie screens will show international and foreign-language art house films, students are no longer required to make pilgrimages to Kansas City, Topeka or Lawrence's Liberty Hall.

The accessibility of such films is an educational opportunity. Students from smaller Kansas towns, and those with limited travel budgets, can experience avant garde ideas and the vast diversity of the world for a bargain $4.

Take advantage.

Those curious, cultured individuals who have clamored for access to such films should support Varsity Theatre.

Perhaps, to complete the change, they could dispense with popcorn and soda, and begin to serve alternative foods and coffee?

So, whether it's a current re-staging of a Shakespearian tragedy or an obscure Australian comedy, go see an art film and support this endeavor.

▶ IDEAS ABOUT DEMOCRACY WRONG

Editor,

This is a reply to William Thomas Burdette's column from the Feb. 15 Collegian. I will not address most of Burdette's ideas from his article since, as he admitted, it is full of gross generalizations. However, I am compelled to reply to his definition of democracy.

Burdette wrote we "can legislate anything the majority wants. It's called a democracy." That is not true. The majority cannot legislate discrimination of a minority, or at least, it is wrong to do so. Of course, it has been done in the past. It used to be illegal for African Americans and women to vote. Germany, under the reign of the Nazis, passed laws discriminating against Jews, and we all know what that led to.

The far right, if given the power, would pass prolife and anti-gay/lesbian laws based solely on religious beliefs. This would make America a theocracy, not a democracy, and there is a big difference.

The majority has no business legislating personal choices in lifestyle, religion or whatever. Look in Webster's New World Dictionary. One of the definitions of democracy is "equality of rights, opportunities and treatment." Somehow, Burdette - and a large portion of the GOP - seem to have lost touch with what America and democracy are all about.

f you have seen me out and about on campus today, then you already know I am up to something a little out of the ordinary.

I am wearing a skirt.

In public. On campus. To class.

But I am not trying to pass myself off as a woman. I could not do that, even if I tried. After all, I am a full two meters tall, built like a linebacker, bearded and not at all effeminate. Well, not usually, anyway.

I am not a transvestite — at least not in the traditional sense of the word: a physical male who tries to pass as physically female. Nor am I a male who gets erotic pleasure from wearing women's clothing. Not that I am condemning or ridiculing those who do I am just clarifying my reasons for my attire. I do not consider myself transgendered, nor do I want to be a woman or live as a woman or have sex-reassignment sur-

And contrary to what some of my detractors are probably thinking right now, this is not a gay thing - it's a guy thing. I am just a guy wearing a skirt.

I am doing this in order to make a political statement about gender roles, and to make those of you who see me think about what it means to be a man and what it means to be a woman. The rest of my attire is male, and my appearance, demeanor and bearing is male.

This is gender fuck — the act of intentionally blending articles of male and female attire in order to achieve an androgynous effect, in order to make a political statement. And the statement I am making is that we still have a way to go in the issue of gender equality.

Think about it - why is it shocking for me, a physical male, to be walking around in a skirt? If a woman wears pants, a suit or even overalls, it is not a perversion. It is a fashion statement. But if a man wears a skirt, watch out! He is some kind of sicko freak.

This says a lot about the role of gender in our culture - our patriarchal culture - and goes right to the core of what it means to be male or female. To put it bluntly, the prevailing attitude in our culture is that being male is superior to being female.

This plays itself out in clothing - a woman who wears male clothing is raising herself up to the level of a man. It is tolerable, since it is desirable to be male. Women are not afraid of showing "masculine" traits — that is just a woman being strong. It is a man's world, after all.

But heaven forbid a male do something that makes him appear "feminine" - that is a sign of weakness. And in our male-oriented culture, a man showing weakness is committing a terrible sin.

"Be a man!" boys are exhorted.

"Boys don't cry." "Don't show your feelings." "Be rough and aggressive and don't be concerned with things pretty or frivolous." These are all messages given to us males from our earliest days. If you break these rules, you are a "sissy."

> And a man wearing a dress is breaking these rules. Showing your femininity in this manner is an affront to insecure males, who feel their power must be maintained as being superior to women. who must "submit to their husbands.' A male dressing in female clothing is "lowering" himself, making himself something less than a man. He is seen as "compromising" his maleness, giving up his male privilege and superiority. Clothing is the ultimate sign of who is submissive and who is powerful in our culture. It marks us, and what our status in the culture is. How we react to people often depends on how they are dressed, and we react very differently to women than we do to men.

In my opinion, the main thrust of the women's equality movement was and is about bringing women up to the level of men. Women struggled to be allowed to share the privilege that males have. And we have come a long way in that respect. Women have confronted and embraced their masculine and strong sides.

But the job is only half done. We men still have not come to terms with our feminine sides. Men have yet to confront and acknowledge and embrace those parts of us that are "sissyfied."

And until we do, women can never truly be free.

So if you see me with a dress on, ask yourself why you are reacting the way you are. You might be surprised by the answer.

College should be about more than cramming

-State students: Pat each other on the back. You deserve it. Maybe I've just been paying closer attention than I usually do, but it seems like students this semester have been particularly vocal in objecting to having their money wasted by others.

As I sat in the K-State Union the other night and listened to a group of students cramming for the semester's first big wave of tests, however, I Myview began to see that many still aren't vehemently opposed to wasting their own. For the tuition students pay, I would think everyone would be eager to learn as much as possible, yet the primary

Schields concern of the group I overheard was memorizing the minimum amount of information that could be regurgitated for a "B."

All right. If they don't mind paying money to swallow and spew, there's nothing to stop them. They might even earn a decent grade for the course, but will they be any wiser for it?

KEELY

Here is where I jump on my soapbox. Why would anyone dip into their pockets and pay for an education but do virtually nothing more to attain one? It would be swell if you could simply enroll in your classes, pay your tuition and let the enlightenment sink in, but that's not the way it works. As with anything that's worth attaining, an education requires some degree of effort.

Understanding is the key. This is the characteristic by which a truly educated person can be identified. A truly educated person understands a variety of things and is wiser for it. I would like to think that any person who earns a degree from K-State could safely be called an educated person, but I'm not so sure.

Take, for example, the person who graduates from high school never having learned to read. Evidently, that person slipped through the cracks.

To some extent, it's still possible to slip through the cracks even at the university level. By that, I mean many classes can be passed, and passed with a good grade, without learning a thing.

That's why I can't blame this group of students. When the class isn't all that interesting, and it's possible to get by, it's easy just to go for the grade. I've done it. My friends have done it. Probably everyone has at some point, but the grade that results in these instances doesn't mean anything.

This is not to say it's impossible to become educated in a system of letter grades. In fact, that's what makes it such an ideal evaluation system for higher education. The burden of learning rests on the shoulders of the student. Nobody is going to hold someone else's hand and make sure learning takes place. As things are, you actually have to talk to a person to discern whether that person is educated.

Just as understanding isn't always reflected in a transcript, the bulk of the wisdom a student gains in college never shows up on paper. This is the wisdom that comes from new life experience, but once again, the people who expose themselves to a variety of experiences are generally the same ones who take away some knowledge from the classes they take.

By that same token, I'm willing to bet money, marbles or a large piece of chalk that the students who have been so outspoken concerning certain fee increases have received more mileage for their education dollar than most. They've taken it upon themselves to make sure they get their money's worth.

SLIP CONNECTION FEE IS NOT UNREASONABLE

First off, the fact that you were able to come forward in today's editorial and say "We screwed up!" only validates the awards and high praise your newspaper has received. I look forward to reading this fine newspaper every morning.

While you did a more than admirable job of voicing student opinion, and pointing out flaws in athletic department numbers last week, I can't agree with your assertion in the Feb. 14 editorial that students are "getting screwed" by having to pay for SLIP connections to K-State computer servers so they can use the Internet.

No semesterly fees were increased. Charges will strictly be made on a "pay-for-what-you-use" scale. And these are only charges for outside connections. Usage of the on-campus labs is still free for all heck, you don't even have to show identification at the door like at some other universities. Just walk right in! I wonder if all of those people in the lab, on any given night, are really K- State folks?

You say these charges themselves may be comparable to commercial vendors, but how comparable are the products received? America Online, for example, has one, maybe two local numbers in the Manhattan area where subscribers can dial in. The fastest of these two lines, last I checked, was an agonizingly slow 2400 kbps. CNS offers connections as fast as 28.8 kbps.

Neil Erdwien deserves a hearty thanks for making available to students and staff, a "networking package" of software that is easy to get, and easy to configure and install. All the usage rights, etc., are taken care of, as long as the user of this package is a K-State student or a faculty or staff member. An employee at Flint Hills computing told me that I either had to have my own set of software, or I could "purchase their package" of browser software. Frankly, the representative at Flint Hills wasn't that anxious to talk with me about it over the phone - he wanted me to come in and meet face-to-face. Will students be able to take advantage of CNS by getting the free software, and using it to access Flint Hills services? This remains to be seen.

K-State has enjoyed free networking services for several years. Now that the Internet has exploded into a valuable commodity, offering trivia and statistics, poetry and pornography, and above all, information, we're going to have to learn to pay for it, like everyone else.

By the way, last I checked the library was still free. Read all you want. And if you have a card, you can check it out and take it with you. Then you'll have something to read at home while your computer tries to dial in to the Internet.

THE FACTS FROM FACULTY SENATE COMMITTEE

The article "K-State Charges for Access" and the editorial "Metered Fee Unreasonable for Dial-Up Use" in the Feb. 14 edition of the Kansas State Collegian contained errors that misrepresented the position taken by Faculty Senate on proposed charges for dial-up use of the University computer system.

The news and editorial staff of the Collegian were informed of the mistakes in the article and editorial and promptly issued an apology on the editorial page in the Feb. 15 edition of the Collegian. We accept their apology and look forward to continued cooperation between the Collegian staff and Faculty Senate. The purpose of this letter is to provide details about what Faculty Senate did, and did not do, on this

First, Faculty Senate did not propose or approve the charges for connecting a home computer to the University computer system via SLIP access. The charges were proposed by Dean Elizabeth Unger, Vice Provost for Academic Services and Technology and Dean of Continuing Education. The Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning (FSCOUP) was asked by Faculty Senate President John Havlin to review the issue of charges for SLIP access after he learned of Central Administration's intent to implement the charges. Dean Unger met with FSCOUP on Jan. 23, and FSCOUP also discussed the proposal at a meeting on Feb. 6. During these meetings, pros and cons of the proposal were discussed. FSCOUP decided not to take action on the proposal, but to report background information and concerns about the Internet resources. faculty and student input on the proposal has been very limited to this point.

As Chair of FSCOUP, I reviewed these concerns during the report from FSCOUP at the Faculty Senate meeting on Feb. 13 and stated that FSCOUP had decided not to recommend formal opposition to the proposal from Dean Unger. After additional discussion of the issue, Faculty Senate did not take action to either support or oppose the proposal. I believe this was the proper thing to do since we were reviewing the proposal for information purposes and not for formal Certainly, Faculty Senate did not approve the proposed charges as stated in the article nor propose a bill supporting the charges as stated in both the article and editorial in the Feb. 14 edition of the Collegian. These statements are inaccurate, along with the allegation in the editorial that faculty bypassed Student Senate on this issue. Faculty Senate had no intent to bypass Student Senate. This was a proposal from administration. They did not ask our opinion either. We simply learned of the proposal and investigated it.

Perhaps both the Collegian staff and Faculty Senate can learn from these mistakes and move on to working better together.

▶ COLLEGIAN INTERNET EDITORIAL OFF-BASE

I think the Collegian's editorial against the fee for dial-up use was way off-base. In some ways the editorial implies that there was some sinister plot to "screw" the students again. Maybe the process could have been handled differently, but otherwise it is a move that obviously had to happen. As has been reported in the Collegian, it is a matter of luck if you are able to get a SLIP line in the evening from the hours of about 6:30 p.m. to midnight. There are also problems getting an open line in the afternoon. I am surprised a fee for access to dial-up use hasn't been initiated before.

I am one of those faculty members who requires students to use the Internet and participate in a Listserv (electronic discussion group) for some of my courses. I also use email to communicate with students who are at home studying and have a question on the course material.

However, most of my students do not have computers in their apartments and still manage to do all the assignments in the computer labs on campus. It is convenient to be able to sit in your apartment and access the Internet, e-mail, etc., but it is not required. The vast majority of students I have heard from on the dialup fee do not see it as unreasonable. They don't mind paying a small fee, provided the access to open lines is vastly improved in the evenings.

Understandably, additional fees for students have to be looked at carefully. However, this is a situation where the fees are warranted.

NORM STEWART NOT BEST COACH IN CONFERENCE

Editor,

This is in response to Chris May's column in the Feb. 16 edition of the Collegian. I would like to question Chris' authority to judge the best and worst coach, among other categories, in Big 8 history.

Norm Stewart is a questionable choice as the conference's best coach. Please realize, in his 29 years he has not accomplished nearly as much as KU's Roy Williams has in less than eight. Williams is the fastest coach to 200 wins in conference history and has been to the Final Four with the Jayhawks twice: a feat Stewart cannot claim once, although he has coached highly-talented teams.

Other candidates could include Oklahoma State's Eddie Sutton (NCAA Tourney with four different schools), Hank Iba and KU's Phog Allen, to name just a few.

Now to the most grotesque statement: Johnny Orr is the conference's worst coach. How? Is that why he was around so long? I'm just curious. I think he had a few more victories than CU's Joe Harrington and our own Dana Altman.

Did your background in college basketball give you the right to print this? How many years have you coached? Were you in the huddle at Iowa State's timeouts only to find out that "his assistants did more coaching than he did"? Please, before you judge coaches, try to remember that you have absolutely no experience doing what they do at the level in which they do it. Yes, assistant coaches are important, but the head coach coordinates the program and makes the critical deci-

I have a few other notes to pass

In 1987-88, K-State did not beat KU at home, nor did they lose to them in Lawrence. The Cats have not beaten KU in Manhattan since 1983. And the victory in Lawrence was one of the greatest all-time wins for this program. K-State broke the Hawks' 55-game home winning

You forgot a few on your All-Big 8 team. Where's Wilt Chamberlain, Darnell Valentine and Clyde Lovellette (KU), Jeff Hornacek (Iowa State), or Mitch Richmond (K-State)? This short list does very little justice to such a great tradition, but there are many that would be more qualified than some of your choices. Mike Evans was a good player, but all-time great? Please, do your history.

And on a trivial note, have you ever been to a CU game? Although annoying, Chip, the mascot, is very active (flips, back hand springs, etc.). OU's Top Dog is a joke. It is rarely as visible as the Jayhawk or even (gulp) Herbie Husker, and these two are much more representative of the school mascot than the Pound Puppy of Norman.

I realize that you have a right to your opinion, but if you are to print it you need to get your facts straight and have some background information and experience in order to establish credibility. Better luck next

CLINTON CONDEMNS LONDON BOMBING

WASHINGTON (AP) -President Clinton today condemned an IRA bombing that destroyed a London bus and urged the people of Britain and Ireland to press for peace despite "these cowardly acts of terrorism."

"I condemn these acts of violence in the strongest possible terms and hope those responsible are brought swiftly to justice." Clinton said in a statement issued by the White House.

Hours earlier, the Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for a bomb that ripped the top off a double-decker bus in London.

Police said the bus was not the target and were trying to determine if the lone fatality was the bomber. Nine people were taken to hospitals, including one man believed to be the bus driver.

"It is with great sadness that I once again express my condolences to the victims of an IRA bomb in London," Clinton said. "These cowardly acts of terrorism are the work of individuals determined to thwart the will of the people of Northern Ireland."

The president had condemned the IRA's deadly bomb attack Feb. 9 in east London, which broke a 17-month truce. The group planted another bomb in a central London phone booth on Thursday; police deactivated it before it could cause any harm.

"We must not let the men of the past ruin the future of the children in Northern Ireland," he said today in a written statement.

UFO craze grips Nevada town

RACHEL, Nev. — If E.T. is ever look- A'Le'Inn for breakfast. ing for a place to phone home, or searching for a route back to his extraterrestrial kin, this blip of a town may be just the ticket.

Long a mecca for people who believe we are not alone, Rachel is now the anchor for Nevada's newest tourist attraction the Extraterrestrial Highway. It's even going to get official state highway signs.

Folks here are convinced there are alien visitors just over the mountains to the south, at a top-secret government base known as Area 51 or Groom Lake.

"I think there are people and machines from other planets over there," Pat Travis said as she scrubbed breakfast dishes at the Little A'Le'Inn - think "alien" - the focal point of this hamlet of 100 people. "I think our government is working in conjunction with them."

"I don't doubt for a minute that there are extraterrestrials," said Chuck Clark, an amateur astronomer who has written a guidebook on the area. "To think we're the only life in the universe is ludicrous.'

Area 51 is veiled in mystery. The heavily guarded, isolated base 85 miles north of Las Vegas is where the government has tested some of its most exotic aircraft, including the U-2, SR-71 Blackbird and F-117A stealth fighter, and is now believed to be flying Aurora, apparently a new reconnaissance plane.

Officially, the military won't even acknowledge the base exists. Uniformed Marines and Air Force personnel drive through, and some stop at the Little

"I have never had anybody who works at Area 51 tell us anything," Travis said. "We've had some of them get pretty drunk, and they still don't tell anything."

While the federal government wishes everyone would go away, the Nevada Transportation Department recently named a 92-mile stretch of desolate state route 375 the Extraterrestrial Highway. It plans to put up four signs for $3,300.

Gov. Bob Miller said some of the signs should be placed flat on the ground "so aliens can land there."

The governor said the designation shows Nevada has a sense of humor, as was the case several years ago when a magazine named U.S. 50 across the state "the loneliest road in America."

"Instead of being insulted, we turned it around, set up way stations and created Tshirts and bumper stickers reading, 'I survived the loneliest road in America," Miller said.

The Extraterrestrial Highway runs between the hamlets of Hiko and Warm Springs, traversing mountain passes and deserts covered with scrub brush and juniper trees. Highway officials say it draws only about 50 vehicles a day on average, though more show up twice annually when Rachel holds "UFO Friendship Campouts" for tourists looking for flying

Clark, 50, said he has seen mysterious sights such as glowing orbs of light around

"I think the stuff that is being seen is alien, but under the control of our government," he said. "I don't know if they're spaceships. But they're beyond our physics.

The tiny cafe features racks of UFO Tshirts, caps and books, and photos taken from a distance of the hangars and 30,000foot runway at Groom Lake.

The photos were taken before the government last year banned public access to two ridges overlooking the complex. UFO buffs still seek out the black mailbox along Highway 375 that marks the road leading to restricted land surrounding Area 51. But armed guards keep gawkers more than seven miles from the base.

They cannot block the sights and sounds, such as the light and deafening roar that sweep across the remote valley when Aurora takes to the sky, Clark said. Pat Travis has seen many strange sights in the nighttime sky around Rachel. She told of one incident when a strange beam of light pierced an iron door at the cafe, illuminating the doorjamb. "I really believe in UFOs," she said, flipping a pancake on a griddle. "This is not just something to sell T-shirts.'

She and her husband, Joe, haven't actually encountered an alien. Neither has Joe Travis, 57, and thinks

The toughest task for the K-State women's basketball team in tonight's game against Hampton might be staying focused.

Distractions abound entering the game, slated for 7 p.m. in Bramlage

The Wildcats picked up a surprising win at 17-7 Oklahoma State Sunday, so a letdown would be natural against the 9-14 Pirates.

There's also the fear of looking ahead to Sunday's matchup against first-place Kansas, a game which will be important to the Cats for seeding in the Big 8 Tournament, as one game separates fifth and eighth place in the Big 8 after last weekend's action. Still hanging over-

Leading the way on the weekend was Missy Decker, who scored 40 points over the two games. Brit Jacobson leads K-State offensively, ranking seventh in the Big 8 with 14.4 points per game. But K-State's strength is defense. The Cats rank third in the Big 8 in scoring defense, allowing 62.2 points per game.

However, it is last in scoring offense with 62.1 points per game, more than five points per game less than any other Big 8

Like the Cats, the Pirates have had an up-and-down season in this, their first season in Division I basketball. Hampton has struggled in Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference games, posting a 1-5 conference record.

Hampton competed in the Division II Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association last season, where it posted a 10-18 overall record, 6-13 conference. Hampton is led by Shani Bauldrick, who averages 11.3 points per game and 7.1 rebounds per game. The only other Pirate to average double figures, however, is JoVanka Lewis, who averaged 12.7 points per game over seven games

But for senior Karina Kuregian, this season has had its shares of ups and downs.

Following her tremendous junior season, Kuregian didn't get off to the start she would have hoped for.

In the season-opening tournament, the Travelers Express Invitational in Manhattan, Kuregian was one of the favorites in her draw.

She won her first match but lost her second in straight sets to eventual champion Mary Beth Maggert of Purdue. Kuregian later met teammate Yana Dorodnova in the third-place match. Kuregian lost that match also.

Next for Kuregian was the National Clay Court Championships in Baltimore. Kuregian struggled there also, losing in the first round. Kuregian did not enter the Big 8 Coaches Indoors in Topeka Oct. 6-8, but it was at the Rivera All-American Championship in Pacific Palisades, Calif., where Kuregian recorded one of her biggest victories in singles action.

Kuregian opened the tournament by upsetting the No. 5 player, Margie Lepsi of Tennessee, in straight sets.

"That was the highest-ranked player I have ever beat, but it wasn't the best I have ever played," Kuregian said.

Kuregian finished the fall season with a 5-8 record in singles action. She said pressure to perform as well as she did last year affected her.

"I definitely felt some pressure. I felt that I had to perform as well, if not better, this season," Kuregian said.

But it wasn't just pressure affecting her play.

Dear Shane,

OK, I know that I made a huge mistake in keeping Lin Elliott all year long. But I have listened to the pressure and threats of the fans, and I have let go of Lin Elliott. But now I am without a kicker.

My general manager is too cheap to go out and get me a real kicker, so what am I to do for next season?

Former KC, Oakland Athletics owner, Charlie Finley, dies at age 77

Associated Press

CHICAGO - Charlie O. Finley, the ornery and outrageous baseball owner whose Oakland Athletics won threestraight World Series championships in the 1970s, died Monday. He was 77.

Finley died in Northwestern Memorial Hospital of heart and vascular disease.

Finley, who lived on a farm in LaPorte, Ind., had been hospitalized for two weeks, according to hospital spokeswoman Lauri Sanders. She said he had been troubled by heart disease for years.

His sons, Martin and David, along with their wives, were at his side when he died.

After purchasing the A's in 1960 when they played in Kansas City, Finley immediately became known for his flamboyance, a trait that lasted until he sold the team in 1981. Finley also owned the NHL's expansion Oakland Seals and the Memphis franchise of the American Basketball Association.

In Kansas City, Finley named a mule after himself, calling it Charlie O., and made it the team mascot. He put a sheep pasture on a hill overlooking the outfield - decorating the sheep green and gold in club colors - and had chip recipe into the Mrs. Fields empire. One of his other young employees was batboy Stanley Burrell, who entertained players in the clubhouse with his dancing; he became rap star M.C. Hammer. Later, Finley tried to convince the establishment to use orange-colored baseballs, which were tried briefly in exhibitions, attempted to speed up games by reducing walks to three balls and hired track star Herb Washington as a "designated runner."

The Internet Movie Database Tour (http://www.msstate.edu/Movies/tour.html) For those who haven't perfected the Kevin Bacon game, this site is a must. It contains data for more than 750,000 movies and 200,000 actors and actresses. The page is designed for easy usage. The search engine will allow for exact matches on titles, or partial matches if you just don't remember the entire name of a flick. The graphics load fast, and if the server is slow,

The best part of the site is all the information gathered here has come freely from the people of the Internet without government restrictions. Test and see if your trivia can go against the collective of the Internet.

Makin' Bacon — the Kevin Bacon Game (http://www.mindspring.com/~mab/ kevin/kevin.html)

For those who don't know what the Kevin Bacon game is, here is a quick rundown.

"Choose any actor or actress in any American motion picture; pick one of the performer's movies; choose a co-star from the designated movie; find a film that co-star was in; pick another performer, etc; repeat until the co-star is Kevin Bacon.'

This game has started a new religion on many campuses across the United States: Baconism. Trust me, it's an addictive game.

Makin' Bacon has made the game even more interesting. It has many examples from a crowd as diverse as Bill Cosby and Charlie Chaplain. They also offer help to all Baconites, so if you come up with a stumper, email it to them.

They have also included a form connected to the Internet Movie Database to help surfers check their answers.

Welcome to Toy Story (http://www2.disney.com/ToyStory/?GL=H)

Whether you loved or hated the movie, this is a fun homepage to visit. They have included everything but the ending of the movie to convince people to see it.

There are also some very cool sections too that have a card game requiring a plug-in for Netscape, but it's worth the bother.

Choosing

the Men of K-State

by Marci McNeal

Many will enter; only 12 men will walk away with a chance to grace the pages of the 1996-97 calendar

he stage is set. The lights go down. The women's screams grow rampant, and the men take the stage.

For three consecutive Wednesdays in March, 36 males will be competing for one of the 12 spots in the Men of K-State Calendar.

The competition will be at 8 p.m. March 6 and will continue on March 13 and 20 at Bombers:

Entry forms are due by March 1, and any male student at K-State is eligible to enter the calendar competition. You can pick up the entry forms at Sun Connection, Pro Fitness and Dean Liquor.

"Entry forms are going fast, so anyone who wants to participate needs to enter soon. I would like to limit the competition to 36 men, so each night there will be 12 competitors," said Bill Price, calendar organizer and senior in secondary education.

All of the participants will receive prizes for competing in this year's calendar competition.

Once all the entry forms are gathered, the participants will be divided into groups and assigned one of the three nights as their competition

The calendar contest includes three rounds of competition - the formal, the casual and the athletic.

Price said in the formal round, the men wear suits and ties.

"This round is set to slower music and will be more of the GQ look. With each round, the music will get faster, and the men will get more wild," Price

In the casual round, the men will wear clothes they would wear out on a date. The athletic-round outfits will be shorts and tank-tops.

The men will be judged by a group of 10 women each night.

"The majority of the judges are from sorority houses on campus, but independent judges have also been picked to judge," Price said.

The judges will have a score card for each round that rates the men participating on a one-to 10-point basis.

"I'm really excited about getting to judge the Men of K-State Calendar," said Angie Mullin, junior in family studies and human services. "This is a good time to gather up all your friends and go watch some of K-State's finest men compete."

Price said the judges will be picked up by a limousine and have a free dinner at Chicago Bar & Grill before the competition begins that night. The participants will also be picked up by a limousine the night they compete with at least two judges accompanying them to Bombers.

"After all three rounds of the competition, I'll tally up the judges' scores of each participant, and the men with the top four scores will be in the calendar," Price said. "This way, four men from each of the three nights will have an equal opportunity to make the

All 12 men who make up the calendar will pose for the cover of the calendar this year.

"I thought it would look a lot better to have all the winners on the cover," Price said. "I would love to have all the guys on top of the Wildcat head at the football stadium with the camera looking down on them."

The pictures for the calendar will be taken by Nathan Ham of Topeka.

"Nathan Ham did a great job with last year's calendar, and I think this year's competition is going to be bigger and better than last year's calendar," Greg Mitchell, senior in criminal justice, said.

Mitchell, Mr. July in last year's calendar, said he entered last year because a friend talked him into it.

"I had a good time last year. I hung out with some cool guys and surprised a lot of people who knew me because I'm usually not as wild and crazy as I was on stage," Mitchell said. Price said his main objective for this year's calendar is for the guys to have fun and to be original and excit-

"I plan on having a good time with the competition. The atmosphere will be pretty relaxed, and I probably won't regret anything I do until the next day," Brian Ansay, junior in market-Ansay said even his mom thinks the calendar competition is cool. He might even buy her a copy of the calendar and send it to her, he said.

Price has added a new contest for the women in attendance each night during this year's calendar competi-

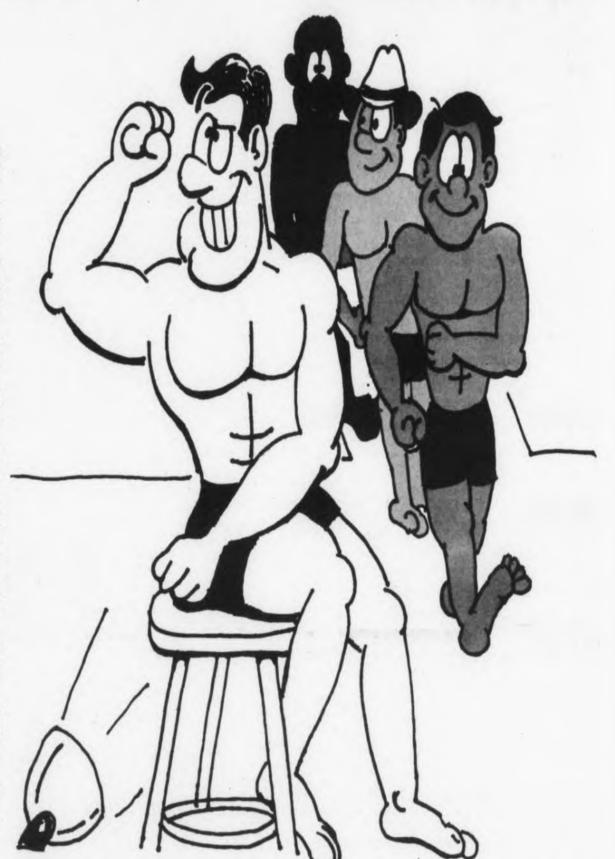

"Each Wednesday night of competition, one girl is going to win an allexpense paid date with one of the four men who win the contest that night," Price said. "The winners will be chosen by raffle, and the date will consist of transportation provided by Classic Rose Limousine Service, a free dinner at the Chicago Bar & Grill and a movie.

The 1996-1997 Men of K-State Calendar will be available for sale when the students arrive back for school in August.

The calendar is being sponsored by Bombers, Coors Light, KQLA-FM 103.5, the Chicago Bar & Grill, Sun Connection, Dean Liquor and Pro

"Competing in the calendar competition actually gives me more motivation to work out and stay in shape. I don't care if I win. I just want to have fun," Sean Hull, senior in biochem-

"Not only do you get to watch some good-looking K-State men on stage dance around and act crazy you may win a date with one of them," Price said

I plan on having a good time with the competition. The atmosphere will be pretty relaxed, and I probably won't regret anything I do until the next day.

Russell: How did you ever get involved in student leadership? Nabeeha: I could never see myself as someone who does not get involved. It's just something that is a part of me. I knew I had to do it to be happy. The first semester I was here, I danced. That was really a part of me because I've always loved to dance. That's a different type of leadership and commitment

It was Ed Skoog who really helped me get started in student government.

People think if they are to get involved to be a leader, they have to get involved in student government. I started off in dance, and that's leadership. Student government happened a year and a half later for me.

Russell: You are graduating in May. What have you done over the past four years you are particularly proud of or have defined your involvement? Nabeeha: There are a couple. First of all, being public relations director for Student Government Association last year - that was a fabulous experience. It was great because I got to work with honorary. We organized that in November. It was a lot of work, but seeing the whole project come through in a week-long event - it was great to know

I could do something like that. Russell: Where's a good place for a freshman student to get involved? Nabeeha: I'd suggest getting involved in a small club. Get to know people on a small scale. Do something you like and enjoy doing.

Russell: You're president of International Coordinating Council. How hard is it to get international students involved in our campus?

Nabeeha: The main reason why there is a lot of the international students come here for an education. They're coming from a very far place and spending an enormous amount of money, and education is first.

I'm not saying education isn't first for us. A lot of them have families, and they don't have the time to commit. You have to deal with it in a very different way. Not everyone will show up to committee meetings, but they will show up to support activities.

When the international weeks roll around, you will get a lot of support from the various international communities to make the event a big success.

Nabeeha: The students who graduate with a 4.0 - and I'm applauding students who do graduate with a 4.0, but if that person is not involved in the campus, there is a certain part of you which hasn't grown.

I strongly believe college is not only an academic experience, but also a cultural experience. I sincerely think you are not a complete person if you haven't taken on an experience other than acade-

Russell: Do you think involvement in college determines your involvement in your community as an adult? Nabeeha: It definitely does, but it really gives me faith in myself. I know I can do things. I might have a 4.0, but if I'm not involved, I don't know if I can apply those things I've learned. Do I know to plan events, do I know how to interact with people of different cultures, different beliefs, different races?

If you haven't been involved you don't know those things about you. Russell: What's it like to run a SGA presidential campaign and lose? What sort of expectations did you go in with? Nabeeha: I was a sophomore. I was scared because the only thing I did in student government was deputy vice president for Ed Skoog.

That was probably the experience I learned the most from. We had the courage to run and stand for something we believed in Russell: What advice would you givepeople who are considering a run for that position?

Nabeeha: You have to be an honest person. You don't stand up and talk to students you've never cared about

You don't say we want your support and we're going to represent you when you have no idea what those people are about - when you've never taken the initiative to try and understand them or the issues that matter to them.

Russell: Are there are a lot of students who aren't majoring in the arts getting involved in the arts?

Nabeeha: Yes. That's especially true with the dance program. The majority of the students who perform are not dance

That's what's wonderful about the arts here at K-State is that they are open to anyone. It's good they open their doors, and that's why we have so much talent. That's why it's such a strong pro-

Russell: Do you think there is a lot of student support for the arts on campus — excluding McCain?

Nabeeha: There's awareness, but I don't think there's necessarily a lot of support. I've always been with people who appreciate the arts, from my mother down to my friends.

Here at K-State, I think someone would rather go to a football game than go to a dance performance. That's fine, but I think there could be much more support of the arts.

We can see this in the money departments get. A lot of the time it's the art departments that have to make the most with the money they receive. However, I do think we have a rich arts community

Russell: How do you get the typical K-State student to turn out to an international event? Nabeeha: They've probably never experienced it and don't know what it's like. I don't eat pork because it's against People tell me to try it, and I don't vate funds, Rawson said. "It's all contingent on our ability to obtain funds," Rawson said. The University expects to get $12.5 million from Kansas' Education Building Fund. The EBF is a one-mill statewide property tax levy dedicated to financing construction of new facilities and repair of existing facili-ties in the Kansas Board of Regents system, Rawson said.

In addition, the University will seek $24 million in federal funds and $3.5 million in private funds, Rawson

The biggest challenge will be obtaining federal funds, considering the federal government's budget prob-

"That will be a challenge. We will pursue that aggressively," Rawson said.

The plan is to get funding and begin the design by late 1997 and to begin construction in late 1998, said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

If everything goes according to plan, construction will be complete in 2001, he said.

The addition, which will be on the east side of Ackert Hall, will double the size of the building, Carter said.

The biochemistry department and the biology division will be consolidated into the new Ackert.

Both biology and biochemistry are located in many buildings on campus, including Bushnell, Leasure and Burt halls, Bushnell Annex and the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building.

real situation.

Consolidating these departments into one building will leave space for other departments in those buildings. For example, the chemistry department will be able to use space vacated by the biochemistry department for the instruction labs they need, Carter said

The original building plan for Ackert Hall, which dates back to 1970, was to build in two phases. The current building is half the size originally intended, Carter said.

The College of Engineering is in serious need of more space, especially for research labs and offices, Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering said.

"We've had a tremendous increase in research activities and in the number of graduate students," Rathbone

Engineering earned $14 million in competitive research grants this year, Rathbone said.

Durland Hall was designed to be built in three phases. Phase one was completed in 1976, and phase two was completed in 1983. The third phase would be completed under the Ackert/Durland expansion project.

The proposed new addition will be located on the west side of the existing complex and will be the new home of the Department of Civil Engineering, now in Seaton Hall, Carter said.

In addition to civil engineering, part of biological and agricultural engineering may move into the new wing if there is space, Rathbone said.

The Durland addition will include additional office, laboratory, classroom and support space, as well as modern, state-of-the-art electronic classrooms, Rawson said.

endorsed him on Saturday. House Speaker Newt Gingrich has privately voiced alarm about Buchanan's strength and said publicly Buchanan should distance himself from racists.

In predicting a Dole-Buchanan race beyond New Hampshire, Dole campaign manager Scott Reed suggested there would be few concessions to Buchanan: "There is absolutely no way he can beat Bill Clinton, and there is no way the party will go over the cliff with him and his protectionist trade policies."

Already, however, Dole has broadened his economic speech trying to address the middle-class anxiety at the core of Buchanan's populist pitch.

"In that regard, he has been a good influence," said GOP pollster Ed Goeas. "We need the right mix of economics and values.'

drugs in the United States.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Want to know when and how to get involved in student government? The following timeline of events, how to take part in the Collegian's focus group and how to understand the Collegian's policies are good starting points.

Timeline

Here is the timeline for 1996-1997 SGA Elections.

March 18 - filing deadline at 4 p.m. in the Office of Student Activities and Services or the dean's office in the respective college. (College council candidates only)

March 19 - Mandatory meeting for all candidates from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

March 20 - Mandatory meeting for all candidates from 5 to 6 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

April 1 — Campaign materials may be posted on campus after 5 p.m.

April 2 — Campaign tables in the K-State Student Union may begin at 8 a.m. (Presidential tickets must reserve tables)

April 3 — Banners for presidential and vice presidential candidates may be displayed after 5 p.m.

April 5 — Expenditure reports are due from all candidates by 4 p.m. in the OSAS.

April 9 — General election 7:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. in college buildings; 5 - 7 p.m. in Derby/Kramer dining April 10 — General election 7:30 a.m. - 6 p.m. in the Union; 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

April 10 — All campaign materials posted on campus must be removed by April 16 — Runoff expenditure reports are due by 4 p.m. in the OSAS.

April 17 - Runoff election 7:30 a.m. - 6 p.m. in the Union; 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Veterinary Medicine Complex

Focus group

The Collegian Editorial Board is forming a student focus group to discuss which issues will be important in this year's student elections. The results of this study group will help shape Collegian coverage for this year's election.

If you are interested in participating, contact

Sarah Lunday at the Collegian at 532-6556 or email the Collegian at (collegn@spub.ksu.edu) by 5 p.m. Friday.

Election policies

The Collegian will not cover party announcements or presidential ticket announcements.

 The Collegian will have one story covering all the presidential candidates and one story covering all the parties. A series of stories will cover candidates' stances on issues.

The Collegian will not accept letters to the editor endorsing candidates. We will print letters that focus on issues in the campaign.

The Collegian Editorial Board will endorse candidates for student body president and vice president, boards and councils.

Each presidential ticket will be contacted about the possibility of a guest column.

SGA ELECTIONS '96

Students identify election concerns

Bill Bontempo

With the filing deadline for student government elections less than a month away, some students are already aware of what issues will be important for them when they go to the polls in April.

"This year the issue would be fees," Robert Fiester, sophomore in landscape architecture, said. "It seems like everyone wants money."

Fiester said he would be looking for a candidate who would try to find other ways of making money.

"I'd try to find alternative methods of raising the money," he said. Steve Humphrey, sophomore in mathematics, said he also does not want to see a fee increase. "I don't want to pay more money because I know I can't afford it neither can my parents," he said.

As an alternative, he said K-State might try to increase funds by asking for donations from private companies.

Keith Kimmel, sophomore in secondary education, said he did not have a problem with the fee increases if they were justified, but he said he would like to see the justification.

"The fee about sports seemed like they weren't looking into their options before coming to students," he said. But not all students said their focus for the election will be on fee increas-Lin Dotson, freshman in criminal justice, said the parking situation is the thing he would most like to see changed. Megan Riley, freshman in social work, said she will also be looking for a candidate who will address the parking problem. "If someone was advocating cheap-

Megan Riley, freshman in social work,

"On metered parking, it would be nice if the two-hour limit were longer," she said.

Some students had concerns about more isolated issues.

Students in the College of Architecture and Design said the issue of tuition structure will be important for them because they must take more hours than the average student to grad-

Melanie Smith, freshman in architecture, said she does not agree with a per-hour, linear-tuition structure.

"The per-hour fee is punishing the hard-working students who try and take on more hours and push themselves." she said. Smith and some other architecture students are in favor of the flat fee, which would benefit students who take more classes.

Travis Bloom, freshman in architecture and member of the Glee Club, said he is concerned with how much emphasis is put on the athletic fee.

"One of the more recent issues is the athletic fee, but they don't look at smaller issues like music, fine arts and drama - which still attract a large number of students to K-State," he said.

When students go to the polls, they will bring varying ideals about what issues they want candidates to address, but Summer Skerbine, junior in elementary education, said she will be looking for more general principles in her candidates.

"I would be concerned with how much attention they would pay to student views," Skerbine said.

The general election will be April 9-10, and the run-off election will be April 17.

Republican Pat Buchanan seals victory

New Hampshire residents choose Buchanan over Bob Dole

Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. - Conservative rebel Pat Buchanan won a narrow victory Tuesday in New Hampshire's lead-off presidential primary, nudging Bob Dole from his perch as Republican front-runner and throwing the GOP race into three-way tur-

Late-charging Lamar Alexander, the former Tennessee governor, ran a close third and suggested that proved him a stronger mainstream alternative to Buchanan than Dole.

The candidates Wednesday were launching immediately into a five-week, 30-state burst of primary contests.

Dole was headed Wednesday to the Dakotas; Alexander looked south to Georgia and South Carolina, hoping his Tennessee roots would translate into regional strength.

For Buchanan, the commentator-turned-candidate, it was another dramatic New Hampshire night. Four years ago, he scored 37 percent against an incumbent GOP president here, asserting himself and his often unorthodox views - in national Republican politics. With 91 percent of precincts counted, Buchanan had 51,469 votes, or 27 percent, to 49,648 or 26 percent for Dole. Alexander had 43,600, or 23 percent. Publishing heir Steve Forbes was a distant fourth at 12 percent, and said by associates to be reassessing his campaign but certain to press on for another week because of his strength in Arizona and Delaware

In exit polls, voters cited pocketbook issues jobs, taxes and budget deficits - as they judged the eight-man Republican field.

Asked which issue mattered most in deciding how they voted, one in four cited the economy and jobs, and one in five cited taxes. Roughly 15 percent said the federal budget deficit. In clear reflection of the race's volatility, 60 percent said they settled on their choice in the final week.

The estimated capital improvements needed for K-State totals $32.3 million, according to the Kansas Board of Regents' report on Aging Campuses and Crumbling Classrooms.

The Kansas Legislature is considering a proposal to issue a $163 million bond to Regents worry about fund construction needed on Regents' campuses, said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president on governmental relations. If the bond passes, K-State will receive $32.2 million for construction projects on campus.

A large problem with the funding of these projects is the inflation of construction costs. In 1994, the proposed Ackert/Durland expansion was projected to cost $28.5 million. But in 1996, the Ackert/Durland expansion is a $40 mil-

It was discovered last year that expected construction cost inflation exceeded the expected interest rates for bonds, according to a report prepared by Aaron Otto based on information from the Kansas Board of Regents.

NATIONALLY RECOGNIZED QUINTENT TO PERFORM AT ALL FAITHS

The Moran Woodwind Quintet will perform at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel

The quintet is one of the most active groups in the Midwest. The group was formed in 1986 and is named for the late John Moran, former director of the Nebraska-Lincoln School of Music.

The quintet resides in Lincoln and tours exclusively in the Midwest, although in 1992 it performed a concert in South Korea.

The group features five different instrumentalists.

They are John Bailey, flute; William McMullen, oboe; Diane Cawein, clarinet; Gary Echols, bassoon and Allen French horn.

Members of the quintet have won national recognition on National Public Radio's "Performance Today"

The recording was nominated for NPR's Lucian Wulsin Award for best regional performance, small

The recording was so popular that it was played nationally in three separate broadcasts.

The Moran Quintet contacted K-State more than a year ago in hopes of performing here for part of its concert tour. Al Cochran, associate professor of music, said.

"We're glad to have them, because it gives our students an opportunity to hear new musicians that they may have not heard before," Cochran said.

The quintet will perform a variety of selections, including the Nielsen guintet, Jean Françaix guartet and Plog's Animal Ditties.

"The repertoire they will be playing will be something new for this audience," Cochran said.

The Moran quintet provides an opportunity for all K-State students to hear some great live instrumental music, Cochran said. It is even better such a well-known group comes from somewhere so close to K-State, he said.

▶ WRITERS WIN POETRY CONTEST

Winners of the Manhattan Poetry Contest were announced Tuesday night at the Dusty Bookshelf

The first place winner was Melissa Rodenbeek, graduate student in English. Her poem is titled, "New Jersey is the Garden State."

"I've entered other contests, but they were always affiliated with the University," Rodenbeek Rodenbeek's poems cover a spectrum of interests.

"Recently my poems have been more political poetry. It goes in phases," Rodenbeek said.

The second-place poem was titled "The Fields" by Ben Cartwright, freshman in humanities. "Ophelia and the Three Dead Heads" was the third-place poem written by Page Getz, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications.

Bryan Penberthy. freshman in business administration, was one of the judges for the contest.

"We had all kinds of poems from two lines to five pages. They were about everything from life, death, happiness and sadness," Penberthy said Judges selected 12 finalists, and the three winners were announced at the poetry reading. Penberthy read all of the 473 poems entered in the contest. "There was a lot of debate toward the end. We had a lot of discussion over the poetry, but we picked a well-rounded representation, Penberthy said

Diane Meredith of Manhattan is the owner of the Dusty Bookshelf.

"I'm so thrilled to have a big enough building to have all of these people here. It gives the store a little life," Meredith Seventy-five poems were selected for an anthology. Tim Bascom of Keats had a poem selected for the anthology titled, "Nurse Powell Picks the Wrong Door and Enters a Poetry Reading.

"There's never been anything like this before. I entered the contest because it was something local happening," Bascom said.

► SATELLITE RETURNS TO SPACE

CAPE CANAVERAL Fla. (AP) - For astronaut Jeffrey Hoffman, the return to space of the tethered satellite smacks of "Moby Dick" and "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Hoffman already feels like Captain Ahab, obsessed with unreeling the satellite the full 12.8 miles from space shuttle Columbia following a Thursday liftoff.

And he said he hopes to feel like Jack. "We're going to finally see what it looks like when the tethered satellite leaves us and disappears ... into space," Hoffman said Monday as the countdown began. "Maybe we'll get some idea of what Jack looked America's biggest street party. More than a million revelers were expected to iam the French quarter for everything from parades to a transvestite beauty pageant.

And while gray skies and rain led up to the big day, it did little to deter those who began lining up for the best spots.

NATIONAL ENGINEERS WEEK

Student wins $100 by sailing toy boat

Duct tape, a few toothpicks and a half sheet of paper were all it took for one K-State student to float his way to a $100 Tuesday afternoon. Robert Tipton, freshman in mechanical engineering, won the Toy Boat Contest as part of National Engineers Week.

"I figured that I could devote my free time to this contest and still come out ahead because it only took me 30 minutes to build it. The scholarship was the real motivation, though," Tipton said.

Tipton won the event with a time of 1.49 seconds. Second-place finisher Keith Koudele, sophomore in mechanical engineering, made his boat in 45 minutes and completed the race in 2.2 seconds.

There were only two contestants. "The contest gave me something to play around with and maybe even make my tuition a little better next semester, or give me more money for spring break," Koudele said. The object of the contest was to see which boat could carry a roll of pennies across a water-filled tank in the shortest amount of time while being pulled by a 500-gram weight.

But contestants agreed early in the competition that 500 grams was too much after watching one boat sink to the bottom of the tank and complete the course in .5 seconds.

After several trial runs experimenting with different weights, the winning times were completed using only 20 grams of weight.

'I thought we were going to have to change the contest to a submarine race after the tidal wave occurred," said Dustin Coffel, senior in electrical engineering and an organizer of the

The Engineering Student Council and the National Society of Professional Engineers, sponsors for the event, had several ideas for the competition, such as a catapult contest, but decided to debut the boat con-

"We had a bunch of ideas to get participation from students, but we thought that this contest would be easier to do and take less time. Plus, the $100 scholarship was a good incentive," said Rob Zienkewicz, junior in electrical engineering and an organizer of the event.

Although this was the first year for the competition, it proved to be beneficial to both participants and organizers alike.

"After some trial and error, a lot was learned on the part of both parties," Coffel said.

"We learned that it definitely needs some modification for the contest next year," he said.

Other competitions included in Engineering Week are the Egg Drop Competition for junior high students Thursday at 12:30 p.m. and the E-Olympics, a competition between engineering faculty and students, at 4 p.m. Thursday.

The original plan included building two practice fields and one competition field, complete with concession stand, restrooms, an irrigation system, fencing and electrical service. It also included the possibility of converting the practice fields into competitive-quality fields.

"We have to look at what are real essentials," he said.

'The thing I'm concerned with is you end up one year from now with no lights and an essentially unplayable field," Snead said.

COLLEGIANopinion

Collegian sets policies for election coverage

As the leaves bud on trees, the campaign signs go up. It is time for elections.

Before students start announcing candidacies for student body president and Student Senate, the Collegian has decided what its policies will be regarding coverage and letters to the editor.

In the past, candidate photo placement and story length have been issues - resulting in accusations of Collegian bias. In the interest of equality, we will not cover party announcements or presidential ticket announcements.

Once the deadlines for candidate and party filings have passed, we will have one story covering all the presidential candidates and one story covering all the parties. A series of stories will cover candidate issues.

The Collegian Editorial Board will conduct focus groups or issue discussion groups. The board will conduct one focus group of student volunteers and one focus group of student leaders. Based on the issues these students feel are important, we will print a series of stories about the issues and where the can-

We feel that too many times in the past, candidates have not addressed the issues students feel are important. By conducting focus groups, we hope to let candidates know certain issues should be addressed.

On the editorial page, we will not accept letters to the editor endorsing candidates. Too often, we cannot distinguish whether a student writing a letter is part of a campaign machine or is genuinely impressed with a candidate. In the issue of fairness and because of the lack of space, we will not print those letters. We will, however, print letters that focus on issues in the campaign - again as space provides.

Presidential tickets will be contacted about the possibility of printing a guest column.

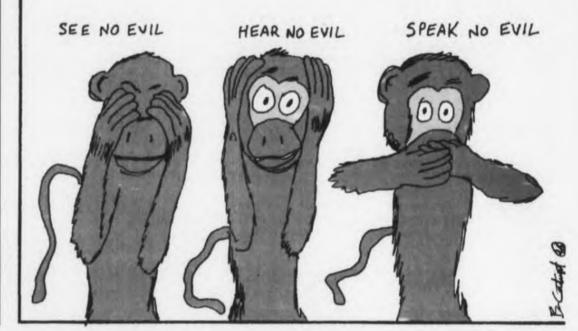

The Collegian Editorial Board will also endorse candidates for student body president and vice president, boards and councils. We will be contacting candidates to set up interview dates with the editorial

The purpose of these policies is not to annoy candidates or give them less news space. We want this election to focus on issues, not candidate bickering. We hope these policies will help the process run

m going to a funeral this weekend.

There will be no body, no weeping relatives of the deceased. No one was in pain, and no one went quickly. Just a preacher and a lot of sad

My church is closing.

It is a big part of me. Religion has never been a big deal with me - my friends can tell you I have never been a Bible thumper and have even argued with more than a few. But St. Paul's Presbyterian has always been in my heart and soul.

During winter break, I went to church for almost the last time. I did not enjoy it at all. That is not to say the sermon was bad or the people were unfriendly. The minister spoke quite eloquently, the members of the congregation smiled and asked me how I was doing - everybody was just great. But when I was sitting in the pew, my mind wandered. I kept thinking, "So this is it. It will all be sold off, and the people sent to the four winds.

I spent this time in church trying not to cry.

Later, a friend of mine said, "A lot of what makes you what you are was subtly a part of it." She was right. I grew up around the church. My Boy Scout troop met there, all of my grandparents went to church there, and some of my best childhood friends went there. My dad went to church there when he was a boy, and he was in the scout troop, too. A lot of weekend activity centered around it. And now it is falling

The decay has been eating at St.

Paul's for a long time. When I was about 10 years old, Tom, the minister, died of liver cancer. Tom had started a family counseling program and was generally a GUESTcolumn young, liberal guy. He was about the same age as my parents, and his ideas were not always smiled upon by members of the slightly older congregation. I did not pick up on this when I was a kid - I just thought he was a neat person.

The most vivid memory I have about Tom's death was that the steeple of the church was destroyed by lightning at the same time, give or take an hour. The next minister, Paul, was not bad - he just was not Tom. Paul appealed more to the older members of the congregation. Tom's departure was the departure of a generation in some ways. The congregation got older, and new people did not stick around that much.

And the people were not alone in difficulty staying with the church. The replacement steeple leaked. Eventually, they just took it off. It looked like the same church from the inside, but from the outside it was a little odd, as though something was missing.

Nothing is quite as good as the original.

When I was in my late teens, I stopped going regularly. I do not know why, except that it was probably teen-age angst, and the church did not offer me much as a young person. That is to say, I thought the people there had a lot of good ideas, and they were nice - they just were not my speed. But apparently I was

A lot of people stopped going after Paul retired.

A series of ministers - black and white, young and old, men and women - made things worse. The church lost even more people. There was not a lot of consistency. One of the things people look to the church for is stability. The church was confused by a different person behind the pulpit every week. It was like trying to learn about the word of God as someone flipped the channels on the remote. As membership dropped, they could no longer afford a full-time minister even if they could find one.

So now, with less than 20 people left in the congregation, they are throwing in the towel.

I feel like it's my fault. I feel like part of the problem. My memories of playing in the nursery, sketching in the pews and my Eagle Scout ceremony all seem a little tainted now. I will remember those things with joy and bitterness - the church is gone.

NASA needs vision

he Cold War was a period that left its mark on both the United States and the world. When the Russians launched Sputnik, our country was sent into a panic and the push to develop a space program was accelerated.

Today, we still feel the remnants of many factors of the Cold War. One of them is our space program. No one can forget the crippling blow in 1986, when the space shuttle Challenger exploded, draining much of the excitement out of Myview our space program. It became our generation's JFK assassination. Today, if you ask any student in the K-State Student Union where they were when the Challenger exploded, they could most likely tell you. Since then, the space program has not been the same. With President Wild Reagan long out of office, administrative support has seemed nonexistent. The pressing matters of mines buried beneath ice in Bosnia, or the primaries in New Hampshire are more important than what lies above in the sky On Saturday, NASA launched an unmanned, $133 million probe to investigate an asteroid orbiting the

Scientists hope their studies of the asteroid, which will begin in February 1999 when the probe completes its 1.3-billion-mile journey, will divulge the secrets of how planets are formed, as well as provide knowledge which would help us keep asteroids from crashing into Earth. Despite its seemingly high price tag, this is one of the cheapest probes ever to be launched. Under the new Discovery program, total costs, including development time, must be kept at $150 million.

The space program is a difficult thing to appreciate; the costs of such missions, on a relative level to what average people will make in their lifetimes, is outrageous. However, the space program is a justifiable part of our lives. One of the challenging aspects of appreciating the space program is distance. Three years seems like a long time for such a venture to take, but ocean voyages across the Atlantic used to take months to complete as On a basic level, the study of outer space is important, because, sooner or later, it will be a prominent part of our lives. The benefits of exploring space will, in the end, outweigh the doubts surrounding it now. Observing an asteroid may not seem like a step in the right direction, but it is. The first step in learning is observation, and if we are to have successful, manned deep space flights, then we must first see the hazards It is a common fallacy of humanity to fail to see the lack of relativity in life; everything, in the end, is somehow connected. Nature has shown us that through the complexities of niches and food webs. If we come to understand issues in space and how planets, and life itself, began, then we may come to find solutions to problems right here at home.

Vision is an important part of our lives; with an election looming prominently in the upcoming months, we can already see the lack of vision in many front runners. In fact, concerning issues both domestic and foreign, there is little vision to take us anywhere. Every day, with every press release, we lose a little more innocence. If vision is lacking in earthly matters, then let it still reside in the heavens above us.

MIKE EVANS WAS BASKETBALL GREAT

This is a brief response to the letter written by Ryan Burr, which rendered a rather stinging criticism of Chris May's sports column on the basketball greats in the Big 8. Burr accurately clarified a bit of misinformation given in the original column. However, he is way off the mark in criticizing May's selection of former Wildcat guard Mike Evans to the all-time All-

I watched every game Evans played in Ahearn Fieldhouse and many more on the tube and in two NCAA tournaments.

He is K-State's all-time leading scorer, with 2,115 points, and the eighth-leading scorer in conference history. He was the Big 8 newcomer of the year in 1975, was all-league three times and was the conference player of the year in both his junior and senior years. And he was named first-team all-American by several leading basketball publications following his senior campaign. Mike went on to a solid career as a reserve guard for the Denver Nuggets and several other NBA teams.

He was one of the most electrifying and prolific players in the annals of the Big 8. Had there been a three-point shot in Evans' day, he would still reign, easily, as the leading scorer ever in the conference, for well more than 50 percent of his field goals were made from 20 feet and well beyond. And he played the air tight defense that Jack Hartman demanded from all his troops. I only wish that current K-State students could have witnessed, and appreciated, Evans' play first-hand.

Perhaps, Burr, as you pointed out so straightforwardly in your letter, you also should get your background information straight. Mike Evans on the alltime Big 8 team is a no-brainer - right along with the selection of Bob Boozer and Rolando Blackman.

The road to a more stable life for one woman has been aided with the use of this drug

Prozac

by Nikki Prentice

Editor's note: "Nancy's" name has been changed due to the sensative nature of this story.

> t is the most widely studied pharmaceutical drug in the world. Since its discovery five years ago, more than 6,000 case studies have been done on the medicine to treat depression, obsessivecompulsive disorders and extreme forms of anxiety. Its name is Prozac.

The Wall Street Journal reported last month that 12 million people in the United States take Prozac, 21 million worldwide.

Prozac affects seratonin levels in the brain. Seratonin is the neuro-transmitter the brain produces that conducts nervous impulses throughout the body. The anti-depressant elevates the seratonin in different areas of the brain to illuminate symptoms of cer-

Dr. Lou Klobasa, psychiatric consultant at the University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center, said Prozac is not a cure-all medicine.

"It isn't a wonder drug, but it is truly an outstanding medicine," Klobasa said. "It is the first pharmaceutical released that, in a robust way, increases scratonin and gives people the release they haven't had from other medicines.'

Nancy, senior in English, has taken Prozac for clinical depression.

"I was a recovering alcoholic and couldn't shake the depression. I had suicidal thoughts that kept me from work and school. I lived in a very dark world of gray. All the colors looked black and white," said Nancy, a non-traditional student who is also divorced.

Nancy was prescribed Prozac for eight months while seeking therapy and attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings. A year later, she got back on Prozac for six more months while continuing therapy.

Medical doctors or psychiatrists can prescribe Prozac. Dosages depend on the severity of symptoms. 'First, we have to get an accurate diagnosis of the problem, look at the patient's medical history to see if there are any health problems or medication the person is on," Klobasa said. "We look at the occurring symptoms and genetics."

Diane Hilger, crisis nurse at Prairie View Hospital in Newton, said patients usually start with 20-milligram pills to be taken one time daily. People who have been on other depression medicines or have side effects start with 10 milligrams, but usually 20 milligrams is appropriate Prozac is prescribed in monthly increments of 30 pills. Monthly dosages cost from $52 to $70. Russ Patyk, a registered pharmacist of the Disita pharmaceuticals company, said a generic form is not available but will be in five years. Klobasa said if a patient's mother or father was on Prozac, and responded well, it is a good prediction Prozac will work for the patient, too.

Patyk said demographic studies show Prozac is more commonly taken among women than men.

"Women are more open to talk about Prozac, but it is controversial," Patyk said.

Prozac with counseling sessions is beneficial by teaching coping mechanisms. Nancy said she received therapy at Bert Nash Community Mental Health Center in Lawrence while on Prozac. Her counseling was a big component in her successful recovery, she said.

"I had so many people around me helping me. Therapy along with Prozac helped me walk away from my depression," Nancy said. "Seek out all the help you can get. It's not just one thing that can solve

"By learning coping mechanisms, it allowed me to see things that I could do to help myself," Nancy said. The best side-effect of Prozac is it doesn't cause you to be a different person, Nancy said. She said it helped her think more clearly and make better decisions. "It doesn't force you to be someone else," she said.

Hilger said Prozac helps people feel like they did before depression. "They have increased energy, like to be around others, sleep and eating patterns return to normal, and they have a more positive look on the future,"

Nancy said Prozac is not a mood-altering drug like speed or Valium. It doesn't have an immediate change, she said.

"Counseling teaches individuals the signs of depression and helps family deal with the patient better," Patyk said. "It also teaches ways to cope

Side effects such as headaches, diarrhea, nervousness, weight loss and nausea might occur within the first four days on Prozac. Hilger said usually the problems disappear after a week, if not, a lower dosage is prescribed.

One of the negative effects Nancy noticed was she got agitated easily. Also, toward the end of her prescription, she noticed an increased level of anger.

"I know of others who had side effects, but I don't think they responded as well to it as I did,"

"With older anti-depressants, patients had to have on Prozac to stay around supportive people.

Wildcats annihilate Pirates, 78-42

Final home game of season ends in dominating fashion

Dan Lewerenz

Senior night for the K-State women's basketball team ended the way it was supposed to - with a commanding 78-42 win against Hampton.

The Wildcats, who did not have a chance to practice between Sunday's win at Oklahoma State and Tuesday night's match-up, focused on their strengths rather than preparing for Hampton's weaknesses.

'We just wanted to play our game," sophomore wing Brit Jacobson said. "We wanted to play good defense and execute our offense, then maybe look to exploit their weaknesses on the floor.'

The Cats did that and more. After junior wing Missy Decker opened the game with a three-pointer from the right wing, the Pirates evened the score at 4-4.

But that was the last time it looked like a contest. The Cats went on a 13-3 run to establish their first double-digit lead of the game at 17-7 with 10:52 left in the

Hampton would make a brief run, closing to 19-14 with 7:10 to go in the period. But the Cats exploded offensively, scoring 23 points to close the half. K-State had a 22-point lead until a last second shot by Hampton's Dowega Blake sent the Cats into the break up 42-22

And then it got ugly. K-State never led by less than 20 in the second half.

The Cats, up 63-38 with 4:25 remaining, went on a 15-4 run to finish the game, including six points off steals in the last two minutes.

K-State won the battle of the boards as well, outrebounding the Pirates 59-35. "Coach wanted us to go out and rebound, and we did," Jacobson said. "It was a really physical game, and Jacobson led the Cats with 17 points. Freshman post

Jenny Coalson scored 12 and led the Cats with nine rebounds; junior post Carrie Ragar added a career-high 11, all in the first half; and Decker had 10. Senior point guard Kristy Thomas scored two points, with senior post Patty Johnson adding two blocks and two steals in their final home game. K-State evened its record at 14-14, 3-2, since interim coach Jack Hartman joined the team, just hours after receiving their first Top 25 votes of the year. The Cats got three votes in the USA Today/CNN College Coaches Poll.

"I think we're feeling more confident now that we've got some games with him under our belts," Jacobson said.

K-State's final regular-season contest will be in Lawrence Sunday against the Kansas Jayhawks. Kansas, which clinched the conference title Sunday with a win at Oklahoma, defeated the Cats 51-38 in their earlier meeting in Manhattan.

"Any time you play KU, there's going to be a battle,"

"You're always looking to beat them, because then you get to be the No. 1 team in Kansas."

Hampton University's Shani Bauldrick has the ball stolen from her by Amanda Chamberlain during the second half of K-State's 78-42 win Tuesday evening in Bramlage Coliseum. Chamberlain led the team with three steals and five assists.

2nd defensive coordinator leaves; Copes, Venables join K-State staff

Trevor Grimm

An exodus of K-State defensive coordinators to the Sunshine State has resulted in the hiring of a new defensive coordinator and a new linebacker coach for the K-State football pro-

Former Wildcat defensive coordinator Bob Cope steps into his old position, filling the vacancy created by the departure of last season's codefensive coordinators, Bob Stoops and Jim Leavitt. Stoops was hired as assistant head coach and defensive coordinator at Florida Monday, while Leavitt accepted the head coaching job at South Florida in December.

Coach Bill Snyder also announced that former Cat linebacker Brent Venables has been hired as linebacker

The changes come on the heels of a season when the Cats led the nation in total defense, allowing 250.8 yards per game. K-State also had the second- stingiest scoring defense in the nation, allowing 13.2 points per game en route to a 10-2 record.

Snyder said he hopes the established system can hold up through the

"We have gone through fairly constant change throughout my tenure here and have managed to continue to improve year in and year out," Snyder said. "Hopefully that is an indication that a strong and proven system is in place and can withstand the winds of Stoops leaves K-State for a Florida program that has built its reputation around its offensive prowess and has struggled at times on defense, as evidenced by the Fiesta Bowl loss to Nebraska.

Gator coach Steve Spurrier said Florida's goal in hiring a defensive coordinator was to hire the best they could find, something he said he feels they accomplished.

"We went out to hire the best defensive coordinator in the country that we could hire for our program, and we found him," Spurrier said. "Coach Stoops has a track record of being successful, and his record at Kansas State has been outstanding."

Stoops said he looks forward to the challenge of coaching in the powerful Southeastern Conference.

"I'm excited to be working with Coach Spurrier in a first-class program and hope to add something to the outstanding football situation which exists there," Stoops said. "It's exciting, too, to have an opportunity to work in the SEC. I have no prior affiliation with the conference, but I have great respect for it."

Stoops, 35, was co-defensive coordinator at K-State for five seasons and assistant head coach for one season. His track record with the Cats' secondary was strong, producing four all-American defensive backs in the past three seasons.

Leavitt, 39, also spent five seasons as the Cats' co-defensive coordinator. He also spent six years coaching K-State's inside linebackers.

Cope begins his second tour of duty as K-State defensive coordinator, as he occupied that position on Snyder's original staff during the 1989 and 1990 seasons. After leaving K-State, Cope spent two years as the secondary coach at Southern California. In 1993, he headed to Baylor, where he became defensive coordinator in 1994 and assistant head coach in Cope began his coaching career in 1964 at Vanderbilt and also worked at Pacific. Southern Methodist, Arkansas, Mississippi and Purdue before his first stop at K-State.

"Having the opportunity to hire Bob Cope, a proven veteran, as the defensive coordinator, and Brent Venables as our linebacker coach will make this a much easier transition," Snyder said. "Their experience in our program, enthusiasm and compassion for young people will enhance the continuity within our program."

Venables, a starting linebacker for the 1992 Cats, has been on the coach ing staff for three years working with linebackers. He spent the last two seasons as a graduate assistant under the departing Leavitt.

Venables is a graduate of Salina South High School and was a junior college all-American at Garden City Community College prior to his K-State career.

Cats' hoopsters NCAA tourney hopes depend on Missouri loss

John Berggren

It's now or never for the K-State basketball team if it wants to compete in postseason play. At 14-8 overall, 5-5 in the conference and tied for fourth in the Big 8 with four games left in the season, the team more or less has control of its own destiny.

Tonight at Bramlage, part one of four begins against the third place team in the conference, the Missouri Tigers. In the season's first meeting between the Cats and the Tigers, the Tigers beat the Cats in an 86-80 game that was closer than the score

The Cats trailed by only four with 37 seconds left in the game and possession of the ball. After Ayome May missed a three-point attempt, the game became out of reach for the Cats. The Tigers are coming off a 91-72 non-confer-three-game winning streak over Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma State. The Cats, on the other hand, will see their first action in 11 days tonight. Before the break, the Cats were on a three-game losing skid with losses at Kansas, an overtime loss to Colorado and another ence loss on Sunday at Maryland which broke a road killing at Oklahoma State. Coach Tom Asbury said his team had been working diligently during the break.

'We've been cleaning up a number of things we needed to," Asbury said.

"Primarily we're focusing on finishing Big 8 play strong. I'm not sure that an 11-day lay-off helps anybody at this point in the season. We'll have to wait and see when the results show up at the end of the

"We've been working on conditioning, shooting and cleaning up the offense. We didn't spend all that much time concentrating on Missouri because I think you can overkill that."

Asbury said the first match-up with Missouri must be put in the past.

"We can't worry about Missouri. We have to worry about us playing differently and smarter than we did over there.

"I'm not sure how they do at College Park, Maryland has much to do about how they play at Manhattan, Kansas," Asbury said. "We can't worry about the mind set of anybody else. We have to worry about ourselves." One of the keys to tonight's game is to not fall into the same physical trap against Missouri as the Cats did last time. In the last match-up, the Cats found themselves in serious foul trouble and fouled out Elliot Hatcher and Mark Young in the contest. "We can't get into it physically with them,"

Asbury said. "They're a little better than we are playing physically. We need to move our feet and play more of a finesse type of a game. That doesn't mean we back down. It means you need to play smarter when you play physically.

"We hope to be better prepared for their physicalness," Asbury said.

"In that game, (Jason) Sutherland and (Derek) Grimm shot our lights out."

During the Cats losing skid, their defense has remained consistent and has allowed them to stay in games. Their effort on the offensive end has been a different story. The Cats shot only 33 percent against Colorado and committed 26 turnovers against Oklahoma State.

"We've got to make shots this time of year," Asbury said.

"You can defend all you want but if you don't shoot the ball, you're going to have problems." Other problems for the Cats have come on the boards. Kansas out-rebounded the Cats 44-37, and Colorado out-rebounded the Cats 45-38. Asbury said the boarding problem was just a mental one. "It just shows a lack of concentration. It can be quickly turned around and has to be turned around because our next two opponents are huge. We better be able to rebound, or we're going to have some

"Hopefully, we can come back real fresh mentally and be ready to play against Missouri," Asbury

"Maybe the rest will turn out to be good, but there is no way to know."

Just five games into the season, the K-State baseball team has shelled out 90 runs against its opponents - an average of 18 runs per game.

The Wildcats improved their record to 5-0 on the season last weekend in Colorado Springs as they posted three definitive wins over the Air Force Falcons.

"I thought our guys did a terrific job for our first time on the road," Coach Mike Clark said. "The offense was a positive."

In game one of the series, K-State was led by right fielder Chris Hess and second baseman Scott Poepard. Hess, who was 4of-6, shot two doubles and had four RBIs against the Falcons Saturday. Poepard was 3-of-6, including his second homerun of the season and five runs knocked

The Cats showed they had speed as five players stole bases in Saturday's contest, including two by Dave Hendrix. Matt Koeman earned the win as he pitched six innings with only four earned runs and improves to 2-0 on the season.

In the second battle between the Cats and the Falcons, Poepard knocked out two more home runs, pushing his season total to four and bringing in five RBIs. It was Poepard's fourth multiple homerun game of his career. He also had a double as he went 3-of-4 from the plate. Dave Hendrix, who started at first base for the Cats Sunday, also had a homerun and a double as he went 3-of-5 for the day with four RBIs. Jon Oiseth earned his first win of the season as he pitched four innings with seven hits, five earned runs and five strikeouts. In Monday's meeting between the teams, Hess extended his hit streak to 22 games, dating back to last season's final 17 games. The stars were different however, as newcomer Jason Bichelmeyer, starting at first base, had a career-best 6 RBIs as he hit

4-of-6 from the plate with a double and a home run. Home runs were also hit by transfer catcher Paul Cranford and third baseman Todd Fereday. Eric Yanz won the third decision, also his first win of the year.

But still, defensive errors occurred, and Clark said relief pitching was an area that needed to improve.

"We didn't really put a complete game together until maybe the last game," he said.

'We still need to work on our defense, and we need more positive outings from our relief."

But overall, Clark said he was pleased with the team's perfor-

Two years ago we would have lost (Sunday's) game," he said. "But our guys showed they have more experience and more character now than they had then."

HARDHEADED SOUTHERNER MAKES IT INTO NEWS AGAIN

This week Smatterings continues its investigation into the propensity of Southerners to avoid serious head injuries. You may recall the Smatterings story about the Charleston, W. Va., man who shot himself in the head while playing Russian roulette and simultaneously operating a motor vehicle. You might also remember Steven Sloan, a Texas Tech University student who was allegedly kidnapped and shot at point-blank range but pulled the bullet out of his forehead, barely injured.

For the past week or so, the world has been celebrating the miraculous recovery of former Cleveland, Tenn., police officer Gary Dockery, who was shot in the head in 1988 while on duty and had been in a comatose state ever since. He spontaneously began speaking last week to his family's surprise and delight, proving there is no way to silence a Southerner with something to say.

This is more proof of the durability and resilience of Southern skulls. Someone in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work ought to do some forensic investigation into the cranial thicknesses of Southern skulls to see if thickheadedness may be an advantageous Southern evolutionary trait.

HE SHOULD HAVE CALLED IT LITTLE GOD

A California man whose legal name is Ubiquitous Perpetuity God has been arrested again for deviant sexual acts. He's been arrested many times for such behaviors since 1978, but this act might just take the cake.

He walked up to a woman in a cafe and exposed his penis to her. His rationale for doing so was he thought the woman might want to know what God looked like. What wasn't clear was whether he meant to show her himself, God or whether God is what he named his penis. Names like Henry, Woodrow and Big Bill just don't measure up to a name like God.

Now that God is going to prison, he'll have plenty of men to whom he can show God. He just might redefine the meaning of "prison ministries" for his cell mates.

The funding of construction with a bond would mean a significant savings over projected construction costs in the K-State is in need of funds for several proposed construction projects, including the Ackert/Durland expansion project, compliance with Americans with Disabilities Act requirements, fire safety codes, classroom improvements, repair and rehabilitation projects, and King Hall fume hood renovation, according to a Regents report.

The proposed funding will go to improvements in several buildings across campus, Peterson said.

If the bond passes,

$10.7 million will go to the Ackert/Durland expansion project.

■ $2 million will go to King Hall for remodeling of fume hoods and for ADA compliance construction, state fire marshal fire code requirements, repair and rehabilitation projects and improved classrooms.

■ $1.7 million will go to the Veterinary Clinical Sciences building for ADA compliance, fire-code requirements and repair and rehabilitation pro► KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS

Bond proposed for construction costs

 Governer proposes $163 million to finance repairs, campus facilities

Laurel Hovell

The governor's budget plan released in January has a funding proposal for the construction needs of the Kansas Board of Regents' institutions.

The proposal is to issue a $163 million bond for construction projects to be repaid with funds generated by the Educational Building Fund during the next 15 years.

The Educational Building Fund is a one-mill statewide property tax levy dedicated to financing construction of new facilities and repair of existing facilities on Regents' campuses.

The plan has been approved by the Kansas Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction and will go to the House for debate this week,

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president on governmental relations, said.

'The House might vote as soon as Friday," Peterson said.

"It is expected to pass out of Senate committee as soon as next week, and a vote is expected in a week to 10 days," Peterson said.

There have been some questions raised about bond repayment and unexpected problems.

The legislature wants to make sure it knows exactly what will happen, because it will be putting Kansas $163 million in debt, Peterson said.

"There is a fear about giving out money they don't see in their hands right now, because they're not always sure they'll have that money later," said Aaron Otto, chairman of the Student Senate Government Relations Commit-

Only a portion of the EBF will be used to repay the bond during the 15year period.

An additional $133 million will be raised by the EBF levy during the bond period, for unforeseen construction problems, Peterson said.

During the last 20 years, inflation of construction costs has averaged 11 percent, according to a report prepared by Aaron Otto, chairman of the Student Senate Governmental Relations Committee, based on information from the Kansas Board of Regents.

Construction cost inflation rates are estimated to be at least 6-10 percent for the next seven to eight years.

During this same time period, the interest rates for long-term bonds are predicted to average 5.1 percent, according to Otto's report.

The Education Building Fund produces about $15 million a year.

Due to inflation in 15 years, this amount will be equal to only $6.26 million, according to the report.

Issuing bonds from the EBF will give the universities the benefit of using the new additions, stop the decay of certain buildings and bring several buildings into compliance with the American Disabilities Act requirements years before it would be possible if they waited year after year for the money to come in, according Otto's report.

EBF allocates $10 million per year for rehabilitation and repair of build-

But $10 million per year is not enough to fund the backlog of projects and the new needs that arise, according to the Regents' report on the Aging of Campuses and Crumbling Classrooms at Regents' institutions in 1994.

K-State receives about $3 million sure they'll have that money from the $10 million EBF allocation, loter. said Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance.

The Regents' report said the most pressing issues facing the Regents' institutions are the aging of facilities and complying with current life safety build-

Other issues mandated by law include access for accommodating the disabled, the removal or encapsulation of asbestos, disposal of hazardous waste, limitation of air pollution and providing clean water.

ry in the Democratic primary, logging more than 90 percent of the vote against token opposition. The fractures in the Republican field gave Clinton and his party even more to celebrate.

"The answer is not to divide the American people," Clinton said, during a victory statement that offered his view of the Republican race.

New Hampshire's results were likely to winnow the GOP field, though none of the struggling candidates would immediately admit as much. Forbes. particularly, had to be disappointed. He had been tied for the New Hampshire lead a month ago, but his effort to promote a flat income tax wilted as moderate voters chose between Dole and Alexander.

Indiana Sen. Dick Lugar was fifth at 5 percent, and Alan Keyes had 3 percent. Illinois businessmen Morry Taylor and California Rep. Robert Dornan had even less to show for their New Hampshire efforts.

We have made history again tonight," Buchanan said in celebration. Buchanan delivered a scathing populist critique of the GOP establishment and big corporations and cast his showing as a victory for the good men and women of Middle America.

Perhaps the biggest difference between Buchanan and his two rivals is

They supported the NAFTA and GATT free-trade agreements as critical to boosting American exports in a global economy; Buchanan blames the deals for sending American manufacturing jobs overseas, and stagnating wages at home. Buchanan is also far more outspoken than either Dole or Alexander Clinging to hopes for a late-night comeback, Dole did not concede. But he appeared resigned to placing second in New Hampshire, again.

"Now I know why they call this the Granite State," Dole said. "Because it's so hard to crack."

This time, Dole vowed a disappointing New Hampshire night would not derail his candidacy, as was the case in 1988.

"Right now it is a two-man race. It is going to be a one-man race before long," Dole said.

"Over the next month, we will decide if we are the party of fear or hope."

That was a thinly veiled poke at Buchanan's protectionist trade views and tough stand on immigration.

Alexander congratulated Buchanan but criticized his ideas, especially about canceling global trade deals and putting tariffs on foreign goods.

SGA to decide Lafene's future

Privilege fee increase needed to offset decrease in reserve fund

Heather Hollingsworth

As tonight's Student Senate meeting draws near, Lafene Health Center questions its ability to function with a budget reduction of $1 million.

The Privilege Fee Committee is going to recommend to Senate tonight a fee schedule that will keep the privilege fee at its current level and cut the operating budget by more than $1 million. The $70 fee was recommended in place of the $20 increase the committee and the Committee for the Campus recommended Feb. 13.

But Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, argued an increase in the privilege fee is needed to compensate for the $2.4 million reserve fund, which has been rapidly depleting since the user fee was reduced from $80 to $70 in 1994. Student Health Services planned to end the fiscal year with $326,000 in reserve.

"I would say dropping the budget by one-third and asking people to make adjustment in one month is going to have big consequences," said Guy Smith, Eriksen Sports Medicine director and medical director.

Lafene was used by 14,000 different students last year. About 9,000 students used the health center last

The K-State University Senior Survey, an exiting survey, shows that 88-percent of students have used the service during their stay at K-State, said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

"Student Senate wants us to keep all the services the same but spend $1 million less," Smith said. "It's nice but usually doesn't work."

But, Mark Tomb, privilege fee chair, said he felt Lafene had not explored all of its options fully.

"I still think you can provide a comprehensive health care system without raising the fee," Tomb said.

Tomb said he felt he had not been provided information regarding what would happen if the fee remained the

"Students needed to see what would happen," Tomb said. Zweimiller said Lafene could not continue to offer comprehensive services if the fee does not increase. Tomb created three alternative options in response to SHAC's recommendations to Senate.

He suggested Lafene make up for the revenue deficit by increasing user fees 25 percent. "I think they should have been more receptive to a user fee long ago, and we would not be in this predicament," Tomb said. But Zweimiller said he was reluctant to experiment with increased user fees without a reserve to fall back on. "It makes it very, very risky," Zweimiller said. "It would be wonderful to have a couple years experience or two. We don't have any experience," he said. "We are treading on new ground." Also, Tomb recommended maintaining a 10-percent reserve. Tomb said a newly created Senate reserve fund in which 50 percent is placed in a short-term account, and the remainder is placed in a long-term account, would allow Lafene to have a smaller reserve. "It creates an account almost like an allocations budget," Tomb said. But the savings created by having a 10-percent reserve, instead of a 15percent reserve, had already been factored into SHAC's schedule C Tomb's three options will be presented to Senate tonight, but schedule F will be recommended.

Schedule D would cost students $80 per semester, bringing the total budget up to $2.83 million.

Tomb said schedule D would not cut the University Counseling Services' budget.

Tomb said the schedule would generate about $127,200 by increasing user fees 25 percent.

The proposal recommended by SHAC had already implemented a 10percent user fee for auxiliary services like X-rays, physical therapy, lab costs

Muslims celebrate with family, friends

AbdullNaser T. Abdullah staff reporter

Muslims around the world this week are celebrating Eid-al-Fitr, which marks the end of Ramadan, the month of fasting.

Able Muslims are required to fast during Ramadan, and breaking fast for no reason is a sin. The discipline of fasting reminds individuals of those who are deprived of life necessities and the less fortunate. Fasting brings around the realization of the sufferings of others, promoting a sense of sympathy and kindness toward them. It is a common practice for Muslims to break their fast during Ramadan at sunset, following the custom of Prophet Muhammad.

Eid-al-Fitr, or the holiday of breaking one's fast, is a national holiday in Islamic countries. The holiday lasts three days. Muslims around the world have different ways of celebrating.

Salat-al-Eid is the prayer of Eid. After the prayer, visits among families begin.

"Every year we have a large gathering of all our family members at our house, where we stay for most of the day," said Nader Mohammed, sophomore in accounting from

The rest of the day is spent talking, drinking tea and having snacks, Mohammed said.

"The second day of Eid is dedicated to my family," he said.

After lunch, Mohammed and his family leaves the house and return at midnight. During that time, they go to an Eid carnival that is every year, then to a restaurant for dinner and to finish the night off — a show.

The third day of Eid is dedicated to friends, Mohammed said. 'Usually I would go out with my friends to a soccer game or to watch a tennis match," he said. Special sporting matches take place in honor of Eid. People retire early to their homes that day to get their children ready for school in Bahrain, he said.

Syracuse University closed its doors Monday declaring a holiday, but not for President's Day. It was in honor of the Islamic celebrations of Eid-al-Fitr, and Syracuse is the first university in the United States to recognize Eid-al-Fitr as a holiday. "Usually we have classes on President's Day, but Monday was a holiday because of the Islamic celebrations," Sue Martini, Hendricks Chapel secretary at Syracuse, said.

Although Eid-al-Fitr started Tuesday, Syracuse chose Monday because the decision was made earlier and Eid-al-Fitr is not declared until a crescent is seen the night before.

"Muslims started to push for the recognition of Eid-al-Fitr since 1992 when a five-year calendar was discussed at Syracuse," said Misha'al Al-Kadhi, graduate student in computer engineering at Syracuse.

After many meetings between the Muslim, Christian and Jewish chaplains on campus, and many drawn-out discussions, letters and meetings, it was decided to include Eid-al-Fitr in the 1995-99 Syracuse calendar.

The administration received input from students on campus and read letters

Facilities workers rapidly remove office furniture from the News Services offices in Anderson 009 Wednesday morning. A water heater pipe burst early Wednesday morning, causing three inches of hot, standing water to cover the carpets in the basement of Anderson Hall.

Burst hot-water pipe damages office

A water heater pipe burst between 6 a.m. and 7:30 a.m. Wednesday at News Services, causing three inches of hot, standing water to to cover the blue carpets in the basement of Anderson Hall.

Jan Hedrick, News Services office manager and computer systems manager, was treated and released yesterday at Memorial Hospital with a sprained lower back.

She slipped in the water while trying to gather computer equipment and wiring. "It was like a sauna in there," Hendrick said, pointing out paint was bubbling on the office walls where water had been. A plastic pipe, about I inch in diameter, burst open within a malfunctioning water heater in Leigh

Anne Nicholson's office.

Because the water was heated, condensation gathered on the ceilings and ran down the walls.

Cheryl May, director of News Services, said News Services was lucky because the water didn't seep into the office next door. However, damages have not been assessed.

"We won't know the seriousness of it until we try to turn on the computers," May said.

Hendrick said she was concerned about the numerous computers in the office. "Sometimes there's stuff inside that you can't see," she said.

Computer Network Services inspected the computers Wednesday and found them to be in working

May said the office will be moved to Anderson 221 for about a week.

▶ DOLE BATTLES ALEXANDER TO BECOME ALTERNATIVE TO BUCHANAN

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) -Before New Hampshire's leadoff primary, Bob Dole was the man to beat for the Republican presidential nomination. No more. Now the defrocked front-runner is battling Lamar Alexander to become the alternative to Pat Buchanan.

Political analysts and Republican leaders were quick to say after Buchanan's upset victory here Tuesday that the conservative commentator could never win the nomination.

"It's a long way from here to San Diego," the site of the GOP's nominating convention, said Michigan Gov. John Engler.

But the dynamics of the race have changed dramatically with the New Hampshire verdict, and Buchanan has acquired one of the most valuable commodities in politics — momentum.

▶ OKLAHOMA BOMBING VICTIMS' RELATIVES BURDENED WITH TRAVEL

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Keith Coverdale wants to be at the trial of the two men charged with blowing up his two little boys. But now he and others touched by the federal building bombing must travel about 600 miles to attend, a journey some will not be able to make. "We in Oklahoma didn't choose for them to come here and for this bomb to blow up here," said Coverdale, whose sons Aaron, 5, and Elijah, 2, died in the building's day-care center.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch ruled Tuesday that Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols "have been demonized" in the news media, and moved the case to Denver to ensure a fair trial. He did not set a trial date.

▶ MEXICO ACCUSED OF TORTURE

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) - A human rights group on Wednesday accused Mexico's army of torture, illegal arrests and other rights violations last year in Chiapas, the site of an anti-rebel offensive.

The military immediately denied the accusations.

The Council of Non-Governmental Organizations for Peace, in a report released Wednesday. alleged that the army abused peasants, foreigners, and human rights and religious workers in dozens of instances.

Conpaz, as the group is known, said most of the cases occurred during a February '95 government offensive, in which thousands of troops entered jungle territory held by the guerrilla Zapatista National Liberation Army.

The report noted the case of Indian peasant Gilberto Jimenez Hernandez, whose widow said soldiers shot him in the face in the community of La Grandeza. It said that case has never been clarified.

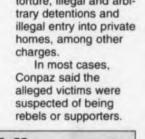

Soldiers and state and federal police agents also were accused by Conpaz of torture, illegal and arbitrary detentions and

About $550,000 worth of renovations and investments are expected for the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area. The goal is to make the area a better research and educational site.

Funding for the project started with a $200,000 donation from the National Science Foundation. The money was donated as a research facility enhancement grant.

Donations from K-State, private organizations and individuals also contributed to the Konza project.

David Hartnett, professor of biology and Konza Prairie director, said plans are running smoothly and the project should be completed within the next year or so.

"We have completed the barn and purchased the scales and squeeze shoots for bison research. We also have our new fire equipment," he said. "Renovation of the house is underway, and we plan to get started on the bison chorale this summer."

In 1987, the Konza Prairie brought 30-50 bison onto the grasslands for short-term research. Since that time, the herd has grown to 250.

"There is a need for a larger facility to accommodate this number of bison," Hartnett said. "We need the facilities to weigh the animals and collect accurate research data. It has become difficult to handle this number of bison with our current resources."

The bison were brought to Konza for a comparative study with cattle on grasslands. A grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture provided the funding needed for a three-year study.

"We have decided to make this a long-term study," Hartnett said. "Right now we are looking at keeping it going for 10 years or more."

Renovation of the three-story, limestone, ranch house has also been a priority for the Konza Prairie director. The 84-year-old house is set for restoration to its historic condition to achieve the appearance it had when it was built in 1912.

After completion, the house will serve as a research and educational facility as well as a visitor's center.

"We want to increase utility for research and education," Hartnett said.

The lower floor will be set up as an education and visitors center. A larger meeting room will be able to accommodate up to 50 people and provide video capability.

There will also be a teaching lab for students and groups traveling to the Konza to do research. These facilities will provide for hands-on learning.

"Friends of Konza Prairie have been coordinating a large part of this project," Hartnett said. "There will be materials such as dissecting scopes, insect collections and plant materials from the prairie."

Scientist from all around the country do research on the Konza Prairie.

"We have arranged overnight lodging for scientists and students who come to do extended research," Hartnett said. "There will be office space, smaller meeting rooms, work rooms, as well as bedrooms and bunk rooms."

Another area of concentration has been the barn. Completion of this proA bur oak stands marked for easy identification by visitors hiking the self-guided nature trail loop at the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area. The bur oak is one of two types of oak trees that can be found in the gallery forest on the Konza Prairie.

Privilege Fee Committee needs wake-up call

Here's a little story.

Mark Tomb is chair of the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee. Tomb's father works for the University, and Tomb is covered by his father's health insurance. Tomb has lived in Manhattan all his life and has a private physician in Manhattan. Tomb is against a raise in the Lafene Health Center fee. After all, he has never used Lafene.

Here's another part of the story.

Last year, Lafene served 14,000 students in various capacities, from doctor's appointments to University counseling to sports medicine and the Women's Clinic.

The Women's Clinic alone gave 1,000 K-State women pap smears last year, in addition to providing birth control at cheaper prices than a regular pharmacy. The Women's Clinic served 7,628 K-State women in 1995.

Those students who use Lafene consider it to be a valuable service. But Tomb and his committee are heading a contingent in Student Senate to make sure student fees aren't raised, no matter what.

In 1994, Lafene had a reserve of $2.3 million dollars and a fee of $80 per semester. Senate cut its fee to $70, to force Lafene to use up the reserve. As a result, several positions, including a doctor and a nurse, were not filled because there wasn't enough money in the operating budget.

The reserve money is almost depleted. Instead of raising the fee so positions could be filled and Lafene's operating hours will stay the same, the Privilege Fee Committee wants to keep the fee at $70. This would cause several cuts, including counseling services (which would also lose it's accreditation) and disabled student services, as well as a reduction in operating hours.

The Student Health Advisory Committee recommended a fee of $90 per semester, which would allow Lafene to hire both a doctor and nurse, as well as a few other positions.

The Privilege Fee Committee wants a fee of $70, but Tomb has admitted he doesn't know which services will have to be cut as a result. Tomb figures Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, can work out the logistics himself.

No one on the Privilege Fee Committee is an accountant, nor do they run a multi-million dollar agency. They should let Zweimiller do his job, instead of keeping to this misguided notion that students don't need Lafene open at night and Saturday's. When a flu wave hits students, it will be Zweimiller not the Privilege Fee Committee - who is going to have to field the complaints about not enough doctors and not enough appointments.

Unlike the athletic fee, the Lafene fee affects every student in visible ways. Tonight, Senate should vote for SHAC's plan and not the Privilege Fee Committee's.

Somewhere amidst all that violence and yelling, we became good friends. I know many adults with brothers and sisters who never reach that level. No matter how old they get, as soon as everyone is together they all revert back to 10 year olds.

The two of us have not seen eve-to-eve on many topics. We have debated politics and screamed at each other about women's role in the church. We have also learned to apologize sincerely so we would look like we meant it. But through it all we have always been friends.

However, it should give us the tools and the rights to ensure that we can take care of ourselves. The section of our society who needs this more than anyone is our prison popula-

The problem with our prisons is the inmates are not properly socialized. They do not have the tools it takes to function in everyday society. The current attempt at a solution is to simply give inmates three square meals a day and a bed and consider the problem solved.

Well, the problem is not solved. Taxpayers have to foot the bill (which is about $20.3 billion according to The New Statesman and Society) for a system in which the majority of the criminals (60 percent, according to the Los Angeles Times) are repeat offenders.

We keep paying money, and they keep coming back.

"Well they are prisoners, they should be treated like dirt."

This is a common sentiment among the U.S. public, but it is also an ignorant statement. If we continue to treat people like animals, we will never break the cycle that will lead to crime-induced If we want to end this cycle of crime, we have to keep our moms and dads out of jail, so they can keep their kids out of jail and in school where they belong. Here's a scenario: A young man grows up without a father because his father is in jail. Thus, the first agent of socialization, the family, is broken. He does not go to school because, like all young people, he is prone to playing hooky, but he knows he will not get caught; his mother is too busy working to pro-

In an article from the National Review, Myron Magnet calls this a "predictable result of unimaginably weak families ... too many under-

SENATORS: REMEMBER. YOU WORK FOR US

This is in response to the recent actions of our student government on the issue of health care fees.

In a perfect world, everyone would have a good job, live a long, healthy life and never have a care. In the real world, people lose their jobs, get sick and die as a result of circumstances that are out of their control.

On Feb. 13, I attended an open forum where students could voice their opinions about the different health fee options. Anyone could have attended.

The majority in attendance favored an increase in the fee to continue this vital service to the students - many of whom have no place else to turn. The minority in opposition were mostly student senators. When they spoke, I mostly heard personal concerns about paying for a service they themselves would "probably" never need. One senator cited his parents' health care plan, under which he was covered.

Can you say selfish? Excuse me if it's not so obvious to you senators, but you were elected to represent the interests of the larger student body - not your own or those of a few close friends. Last Thursday a plan to raise the fee was tabled for some reasons that are still a mystery to some of us. Sen. Mark Tomb thinks we should let Lafene worry about how to pick up the slack left by an earlier reduction in student fees.

KADY

Guyton

What this means is that when students who legitimately find themselves in unfortunate circumstances need those services will have to pay more for them.

Unfortunately, many of those who are ill be needing these services can't fall back on Mom and Dad's health plan and will be unable to afford the help they need at a most critical time.

I'm not sure how many people realize what it would mean to keep the fees at the current level. Services would be cut back, staff positions would be cut, hours of service would decrease and health education programs would go by the wayside.

A couple years ago, Student Senate kicked Lafene in the side for efficient money management. Tonight, a different Senate elected by us to serve us is considering taking away our safety net (which most of us hope we'll never need), unless we show up in force to stop them.

Trash complaints fuel action

QUICKread

▶ Neighborhood associations have been filing complaints to ensure health and safety in the community. The city passed an ordinance on trash Jan. 2.

Some Manhattan neighborhood organizations have filed more than 90 complaints during the past seven weeks concerning violations of two new city ordinances related to unsightly trash and nuisances.

About 19 organizations have filed complaints in relation to the ordinances that were passed Jan. 2.

The complaints were filed by James H. Dubois, member of the City Park West organization, who was asked to represent the organizations. The first ordinance states trash cans cannot be stored anywhere visible from the street. The second ordinance restricts storing couches and other objects, labeled as nuisances, on front porches.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said the ordinances came from the public rather than from the city.

"It came through neighborhood associations and individuals who wanted to improve their neighborhoods," Fehr said.

Dubois said the ordinances were pushed for by the neighborhood organizations for child-safety and health reasons.

He said citizens felt glass and garbage posed a danger for children because the garbage was so openly exposed. Organizations also wanted the ordinances to improve the appearance of the community.

"It has made an effect. It has made it a more pleasant place to live and improved the beauty of the city," Dubois said.

Of the 90 some complaints, Dubois' name has been on nearly all of them, said Mac Campbell, building official who supervises those who look into the complaints.

Dubois said he isn't the only one reporting complaints, but he merely writes letters for more than 19 organizations

"I was asked to write the complaints because some of the residents felt reluctant to act and asked me to do it," Dubois said.

Dubois said his position at K-State as an associate professor of interior architecture has also been a reason why he has been asked by residents in the organizations to write the complaints. Dubois said he has become familiar with the city staff because of his position at K-State and has developed good relations with them.

"So when the ordinance was passed, I was asked because of my relation with the city," Dubois said.

Campbell said complaints have been handled well, and those in violation of the ordinances have been willing to comply.

"A majority are unaware the ordinance existed," he said. "The vast majority of people we talked to are extremely co-operative."

There is a three-step process when it comes to solving violations of the ordinances. First, a city official checks the address of the complaint to see if there is a violation. If so, the person is notified either in person or by a letter.

Those in violation of the ordinance have five days to correct the situation. If there were repeated efforts and still nothing was done, then a complaint is given to the municipal court, which determines the fine.

So far, there have not been any fines levied. Fehr said it takes quite a long duration before a fine is given out.

Study finds Alzheimer's link

Research indicates linguistic abilities could be related to disease

KENTUCKY released from the University of Kentucky Sanders-Brown Center on Aging indicates that Alzheimer's disease could be a lifelong process.

The study, called the Nun Study because all of its subjects were nuns, found that low linguistic ability early in life was strongly related to the development of Alzheimer's later in life, said Dr. David Snowdon, director of the study.

Participants in the Nun Study were chosen due to the extensive archives of their congregation. Researchers used handwritten autobiographies done 58 years ago by each nun when she entered the convent to determine her individual linguistic abilities. The nuns also were subjected to annual physical and mental exams, and agreed to brain donation following their deaths

Twenty-five of the sisters died, and neuropathologic evaluations were performed on their brains. Of those autopsied and found with Alzheimer's brain lesions, 90 percent of them exhibited low linguistic ability early

"We are not sure why linguistic ability in early life had such a strong relationship to Alzheimer's disease," Snowdon said.

"One possibility is that low linguistic ability in early life may be an early expression of the Alzheimer's disease process. Snowdon said the research supports the conclusion that no single cause exists for Alzheimer's, but that it is likely caused by a chain of events. The relationship between no single cause and a chain of events marks something, Snowdon said. "We need to figure out what it's marking, what biological and genetic process," Snowdon said. "Whether you get Alzheimer's, or heart disease, or cancer, is a mix of environment, lifestyle, genes, diet.'

Snowdon said geneticists should also begin looking at genes related to Alzheimer's and whether those same genes are related to linguistic ability.

One of the problems with having this connection demonstrated through the research is that no concrete solutions exist to solidify what people can do to reduce the risks of Alzheimer's. "There's no evidence of anything people can do to prevent Alzheimer's or to slow it down," Snowdon said. "The important thing about this research is that it points a spotlight at

Dr. William Markesbury, director of the aging center, said lack of brain development leading to lack of development of brain synapses may be a factor, but research still needs to be

"We don't have direct evidence that developing your brain and developing your mental abilities and language abilities will help forestall Alzheimer's, but what problem could there be in helping our young people to develop their brains and their minds to their fullest capacity?" Markesbury

Victory

■ Wednesday night's victory moves K-State to 6-5 in the Big 8, which places the Wildcats in a three-way tie for third place with Missouri and Oklahoma.

■ Wednesday, the Collegian incorrectly listed K-State's baseball scores in games two and three against the Air Force Academy Falcons. The Cats won 16-14 and 17-8, respectively.

Break produces 69-64 victory for Wildcats

Trevor Grimm

It was a night of firsts Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

First and foremost, it was the first win for K-State in four games as the Wildcats held on to pick up a 69-64 win against the Missouri Tigers.

It was the first time this season Missouri lost a close game, as the Tigers were 7-0 in games decided by 10 or less points coming into Wednesday's game.

And, perhaps most surprisingly, it was the first time in his career Aaron Swartzendruber scored more than 10 points. In itself, that might not be surprising, but it was the way he

The 6-foot-7 sophomore scored a careerhigh 24 points off the bench in 28 minutes of action, hitting 4-for-8 three-pointers and tying a career high with six rebounds in the

"I felt really refreshed. The (11-day) layoff really helped a lot. I just came out and played hard," Swartzendruber said.

Julian Winfield, who led Mizzou in scoring with 19, said Swartzendruber caught the Tigers somewhat off-guard.

"His name was tossed out (prior to the game), but not much was thought about him," Winfield said. "He comes out and hits a couple of buckets, and we couldn't guard

K-State certainly needed someone from the backcourt to step up, as Elliot Hatcher was a dismal 3-for-18 from the field. Still, an 8-for-9 performance from the free-throw line gave Hatcher 14 points for the night, the second-highest total for the Cats.

"We probably wouldn't want to do that stripe, while Mizzou shot 11-for-22.

very often," Coach Tom Asbury said of Hatcher's shooting performance. "But he does a lot of other things for you. He does a great job defensively. He gets his hands on some balls, runs the team and mixes up the

"He took, of his 18, maybe two or three shots that were questionable. He had a lot of great shots.

The key to this win, however, might have been defense. After letting the Tigers hit 52 percent in the first half, the Cats held Mizzou to 32.3 percent shooting in the second half.

Included in the defensive performance were two stretches of more than five minutes when Mizzou was held scoreless. The first started with 15:48 left in the second half and ended 5:05 later when Winfield went inside

The second stretch began with 6:59 to go and the score 58-55 for K-State. The defensive stand ended 5:10 later when Kelly Thames scored with 1:49 to go. But the game was out of reach by then, as the Cats held a 64-57 lead after Thames' basket.

"I thought we tightened up our defense. We ran them down to the end of the shot clock," Asbury said. "I thought we started to do a better job on Winfield. He was really hurting us in that stretch prior to that."

After hitting the shot to end the first Missouri dry spell, Winfield hit a trey with 8:33 to go. He didn't score again until he hit a meaningless three-pointer with two seconds to go, however.

If you don't buy the defense story, perhaps you'll believe the difference in free throws had something to do with the win.

K-State went 26-for-34 from the charity

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

K-State's Mark Young makes his way over Missouri's Julian Winfield for a loose ball during the first half of Wednesday night's game in Manhattan. The Wildcats defeated the Tigers 69-64.

"It was the difference in the game. We make 26, they make 11," Asbury said. "So it's pretty much a no-brainer there.'

The win didn't come without cost, however. Forward Tyrone Davis went out midway through the second half with a likely sprained ankle after he stepped on teammate Shawn Rhodes' foot. Davis returned later in the half, slapping hands with the student section on his way to the bench.

So what was Asbury thinking with Davis injured and Hatcher struggling?

"I was looking for a seat over by you guys (the media), but there weren't any open," he said jokingly.

For his part, Davis assures fans he will be ready to play in the Sunflower Showdown against Kansas Saturday.

"I know I'm going to be ready to play regardless," Davis said. "I know it's not broken, so I'm going to be ready."

Valuable reserve guard sparks Wildcats with career-high game

John Berggren

If it were not for the outstanding play from Swartzendruber last night, K-State would have been handed its fourthstraight loss, and all hopes of making the NCAA tournament would be lost.

Swartzendruber more than doubled his career high of 10 points by scoring 24 and shooting 7-13 for the night, including 4-8 from behind the threepoint line. He also chipped in 6-7 from the free-throw line and grabbed six rebounds, matching his career

Coming off the 11-day layoff was a key for Swartzendruber's performance tonight.

"He was very valuable tonight," Coach Tom Asbury said. "He is a vear-round worker, and I guarantee you the week he took off was the first extended period of time he had off. We made him take it off because of a stress fracture, and I think he had a lot more quickness and energy. That the rest was very productive for him."

Teammate Elliot Hatcher said he knew all along Swartzendruber could produce this kind of numbers.

"I thought he played very well," Hatcher said. "Swartz came in as a shooter, and ever since I saw him last year, I asked him, 'Swartz will you please shoot the ball?' Then he'd nod his head yes, but tonight he did it. He surprised me, because a couple of times I spotted up and was open for the three. Even though I was missing, I thought he was going to throw the ball to me, but he didn't. I went back, patted him on the head and said good job, and I hope he keeps it up."

Missouri's defense was no match for Swartzendruber as he already had his career record broken at halftime with 14 points. Missouri forward Julian Winfield said his team was not prepared for Swartzendruber.

'Swartzendruber came out and exploited our game," Winfield said. "We tried to come out and shut everybody down, but we couldn't stop Swartzendruber. He stepped up and hurt us."

Missouri Coach Norm Stewart offered a similar assessment.

'We didn't expect Swartzendruber to have a career game, and we didn't do a good job on defending him,"

HUBERT TO LEAVE WILDCATS' TEAM

Basketball coach Tom Asbury announced Wednesday that junior guard Anton Hubert has decided to transfer to a Division II school.

"By mutual agreement between Anton and myself, he plans to finish this semester at K-State and then transfer to a Division II school closer to his home in Charlotte, N.C. This is not a disciplinary matter or an eligibility manner," Asbury stated in a press release.

Hubert was averaging 4.2 points this season, including 1.3 points during Big 8 play.

K-State Sports Information

All-Big 8 picks are in, Hatcher leads

The mid-season picks for all-Big 8 least five of the Big 8's statistical catteams have been out since early egories, the other being Hatcher. February. With only two weeks left in I think it's time to safely pick my all-Big 8 teams for the year.

First, let's talk about some of the conventional teams that will be

My first all-Big 8 team includes

Elliot Hatcher (K-State), Chauncey Billups (Colorado), Raef Lafrentz (Kansas), Dedric Willoughby (Iowa State) and of course super hero Ryan Minor (Oklahoma).

There is a lot of controversy between who should play second fiddle between Hatcher and Jacque Vaughn (Kansas). I'll take Hatcher any day because he can score when it's needed. In the four match-ups career between Vaughn and Hatcher, Hatcher has committed only one more turnover than Vaughn and has shot Vaughn's eyes out in every game, shooting 24-61 compared to Vaughn's 9-24.

The other sure lock for the all-Big 8 team is Ryan Minor, who leads the Big 8 in scoring average with 21.5 points per game. Nebraska coach Danny Nee said it best when he said 'Ryan Minor is like Superman. Somebody should just stick a big 'S' on his chest."

The second team would then include Vaughn, Tyrone Davis (K-State), Mack Tuck (Colorado), Jaron Boone (Nebraska) and Jason Sutherland (Missouri).

Coach of the Year will be a lock for Iowa State's coach Tim Floyd. Nobody would have ever dreamed that this late in the season he would have his team in position to take second place in the conference easily. Especially since his team was picked to finish seventh or eighth, depending on which preseason poll you look at.

The freshman all-Big 8 team has to be made up of Tyronn Lue (Nebraska), Billups, Paul Pierce (Kansas), Adrian Peterson (Oklahoma State) and Bobby Joe Evans (Oklahoma).

Billups is a shoe-in because he is tied for second in the conference in scoring, averaging 20 points per game. Billups also is only one of two players in the Big 8 to be ranked in at

Pierce is also a prime candidate for the freshman team because he is averaging 13 points per game. He is second on the team behind Raef As for all-Big 8 newcomer of the year awards, they go to Willoughby, Kenny Pratt (Iowa State), Gerald Eaker (K-State). Nate Erdmann (Oklahoma) and Martice Moore (Colorado).

Willoughby is tied for second in scoring with 20.0 points per game and is averaging 37 minutes per game. His presence is a big reason Iowa State is where it is right now.

Now let's talk

I haven't.

Other disappointments around the Big 8 are Jarod Haase (Kansas), Julian Winfield (Missouri) and Chianti Roberts (Oklahoma State). Haase's numbers are down almost across the board from last year.

The all-Big 8 surprise players of the year are Shawn Rhodes (K-State), Tyrone Foster (Oklahoma), Billups, and Tuck.

Rhodes has come on as a freshman and seen a considerable amount of playing time, averaging 16.8 minutes per game

Foster has been a bright spot for Oklahoma as a newcomer averaging 10.8 points per game and is third in the Big 8 in assists averaging 5.1

assists per game. Nobody would have thought that Tuck and Billups playing for the last place team in the Big 8 would sit at three and four in the Big 8 in scoring and are averaging 20 and 17.5 points per game.

John Berggren is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. Send your picks for the all-Big teams (johnber@ksu.ksu.edu).

KC band scene offers diversity, dynamic talent

Scott Allen Miller

contributing writer

If you're bored and want to get out of town to see some good live music, you ought to have some idea of what's out there.

There are plenty of bands here in Manhattan, but the opportunities to see them are, at best, irregular. And you might already know about those hyped bands from Lawrence that regularly play The Bottleneck, The Replay Lounge, and The Jazzhaus.

But there are some great bands from Kansas City, Mo., a city whose scene and sound is distinct and much different than Lawrence's. While Lawrence bands tend to take whatever is trendy and improve on it, Kansas City bands are, for the most part, doing their own angry, but catchy thing.

If you get a chance to see Outhouse, do it. If you like grooving, emotional, guitar-driven rock you can actually sing to, you'll like Outhouse. This trio balances disciplined musicianship with unbridled off-goofing when they play live, which is no easy task.

Miller

Outhouse is fun to watch, great to listen to, and they're nice guys to boot. For more information, mail them at P.O. Box 10035; Kansas City, Mo., 64171.

A more twisted, dissonant version of Outhouse's pop-punk is played by the trio Grither. While Outhouse leans toward the sound of the Goo Goo Dolls, Grither is, at times, reminiscent of the pop side of Nirvana, only with better guitar playing.

The band is breaking in a new bass player and will be roaring back to area clubs soon.

Keep an eye out for them and for their A&M EP "All Smiles." To get on Grither's mailing list, send your vital statistics to P.O. Box P.O. 266482; Kansas City, Giant's Chair, Mooncalf, and Rocket Fuel Is The Key are three more trios that have taken the noisy Sonic Youth/Jawbox sound and made it even more emotive and passionate.

Mooncalf recently reformed after a long hiatus, Rocket Fuel signed a record deal, and Giant's Chair (in my opinion, the most impressive and talented of these three) is taking a little time off to write more of its complex, haunting songs.

Giant's Chair can be reached at P.O. Box 3512 Summit St.; Kansas City, Mo., 64111 (this is an old address, but mail sent to it will still get to the band). Neither Mooncalf or Rocket Fuel have mailing lists

Molly McGuire slows down the noise of the above bands and shapes it into dynamic dirge rock.

Molly is an impressive live band with a tendency to ham it up for the crowd during the band's precise, serious-sounding songs. They can be reached at P.O. Box 10214; Kansas City, Mo., 64171.

There are so many more bands deserving your attendance at their shows (Pamper the Madman, Shiner, Cher U.K., Boy's Life, Season to Risk, et al) but, unfortunately, there isn't room to describe them

Look in PitchWeekly for all these bands' upcoming gigs at Kansas City clubs like The Hurricane, The Daily Grind (an all-ages coffeehouse), The Grand Emporium, The 19th and Baltimore Gallery, Davey's Uptown, and other venues.

They also play Lawrence clubs and occasionally the Boston Tap Room, an all-ages club, in Topeka.

If you need even more information, feel free to email me at (igolow@ksu.ksu.edu), and I'll do my best to help you out.

Wefald declines leadership award RAMADAN

The Kansas Board of Regents introduced a proposal Feb. 15 that would provide a $500,000 leadership award for regent presidents upon retirement

During a 50-minute drive from Topeka to Manhattan, President Jon Wefald made a decision many would take days to ponder.

His decision was to decline a $500,000 leadership award proposed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

"I didn't think it was right to participate in something like that when the University has so many needs," he said. "Our faculty salaries, the need for educational materials, academic scholarship funds and operating expenses are just a

Last Thursday, the regents introduced a proposal that would provide an annuity for regent presidents upon retirement. Action for this proposal was set for next month.

Wefald said he doesn't know if other regents presidents are going to accept the

The money would be made available upon Wefald's retirement, and in the meantime, serve as an incentive to stay at K-State

"I am honored to be considered for something like this," Wefald said. "But, I had to say 'thanks, but no thanks.""

"How can I accept one-half to three-quarter of a million dollars knowing that our faculty salaries fall far below the average of our peers?" Wefald said. "Their salaries have been my number one and number two priority for 10 years now and will continue to be until there are improvements. The faculty is the heart and soul of the University. They are what hold the academic enterprise

Wefald also said he feels the money could be put toward the operating budget at K-State.

"There is a scarcity of materials needed in the classrooms. Things such as chalk, maps, computers and state-ofthe-art equipment," he said. 'We need these things, and it is sometimes hard to find the funds to purchase them. This would be a great way to cover those expenses.'

Since his announcement last Friday, Wefald has been overwhelmed with e-mail, letters and calls.

"They just say 'thanks so much," he said. "Most people do good things everyday. I don't think that someone deserves to be paid 10 times more than them for doing something good every once in a while. Besides, how often does someone get a chance to turn down that kind of money?"

"The shops get really crowded with people," Khan said. Women are the main shoppers, look-be felt by everyone," he said. After the prayer of Eid, Khan visits his relatives, exchanging gifts and sweets with them.

'After finishing our visits, we go out to a dam nearby," Khan said. At the dam, more than 50,000 people gather to enjoy the view and spend time with their families, Khan said.

"The next day we go out hunting," Khan said.

about the issue. A committee voted on the proposal, and it passed, Al-Kadhi said.

"Depriving Muslims from this celebration is similar to asking a Christian to take mid-term exams during Christmas day," Al-Kadhi said.

Including Eid-al-Fitr holiday in the five-year calendar has produced positive responses from the Islamic community at Syracuse, and the Syracuse administration has been commended by Muslims on campus.

"The Syracuse community, as a whole, took the first steps toward justice, non-discrimination and true equality," Al-Kadhi said.

The administration provided a kitchen that meets certain Islamic requirements, producing food containing meat that can be eaten by Muslims, since Muslims cannot eat any kind of meat unless it meets specific require-

"It wouldn't come anywhere close," Zweimiller said Tomb recommended Lafene could save $40,000 by having the University pay for a second disabled student ser-

But, Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said he did not know where the University would find funds to pick up this extra expense.

There are two paid disabled student services positions. One position is paid for by University funds and state money. The second salary, which costs about $40,000 by the time benefits are added, is taken from money generated by the student health fee, Lynch said.

"In all candor — at this point in time - I see not other source of funding for this service," Lynch said.

"That particular salary becomes a part of a much larger problem," Lynch said.

If other funding can not be found to pay for the salary, Lafene would have to continue the service, because disabled student services is a federally mandated program.

"If we could not find other internal money - and I don't know where that money would come from - it would be a fair statement that other things would be cut," Lynch said.

Tomb recommended eliminating one of the athletic trainers, who takes care of injuries at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and negotiate with Recreational Services to split the costs for the remaining trainer.

"In the past, Rec Services hasn't been willing to do that," Smith said.

Smith said having Recreational Services split the salary would not save students any money because like Lafene, the Rec is funded by privilege advice of SHAC and the University. The schedule would increase charges for specialty services like phys-

Tomb said Lafene could save $100,000 by combining public relations and health education and converting the health education to complete volunteer presenters with medically trained advisors. This move would allow Lafene to eliminate two salaries, Tomb said Zweimiller said the savings would be closer to $70,000. The health center uses student volunteers to assist with health education demonstrations, but Zweimiller said supervisors were still needed. Schedule F, which the privilege fee committee recommended Sunday, would not increase the student health care privilege fee, bringing the budget to $2.47 million.

Tomb suggested Lafene begin closing its doors at 5 p.m. every day, except Wednesday, when Lafene would remain open until 9 p.m. He also recom-

Student Senate will be voting on the student health fee at tonight's meeting. The Student Health Advisory Committee is recommending a $20 increase in the privilege fee to compensate for a $2.4-million reserve fund, which has been rapidly depleting since the health fee was reduced from $80 to $70 in 1994.

half-time graduate student athletic trainers, who take care of recreation injuries, would be eliminated, and counseling services would lose 10 percent of its operating budget.

The Privilege Fee Committee created three alternative options in response to SHAC's recommendation. Schedule F, which will maintain the fee at $70 per semester, is going to be recommended to Student Senate tonight.

mended that Lafene eliminate its Saturday hours.

"The 5 p.m. closing time wouldn't save a lot," Zweimiller said. "If we cut back to 7 p.m., we are saving $250,000. To cut back to 5 p.m. incrementally does not save you any more." Zweimiller said remaining open until 9 p.m. Wednesdays might actually cost more. "In our organization, to save money there is a time period between 7 and 9 p.m. where it costs additional money." He said by adjusting hours it could cost the same amount to staff Lafene from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. as it would from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Zweimiller said he thought additional cuts would be required to make up for the loss of revenue. "There is no way I can maintain services the way they are," Zweimiller

Office visits would likely remain

But, medicine, x-rays and the lab would begin charging at rates similar to those the community would charge. These entities are subsidized by the privilege fee.

The Lafene pharmacy charges $6 per month for ortho cept, a birth control pill. At Dillons, the same prescription would cost $21.69 to fill.

Students pay $1 for 20 tablets of Banex/ LA, a generic brand of the drug Entex. At Dillons, the same prescription would cost $7.99.

"Of course, one of the advantages to getting prescriptions here is they are cheaper than on the outside," Bill Salero, pharmacy director, said.

Zweimiller said under Tomb's schedule F, the specialized clinics, Sports Medicine and the Women's Clinic would be absorbed into the general health care center.

Zweimiller said this would be a disadvantage because there would be fewen-providers to pay for the same number of patients.

"It would take longer to get in to be seen," he said. Female students would miss the privacy provided by the Women's Clinic,

Lafene administration braces itself, calculators in hand, for the vote tonight.

Does Zweimiller have any idea how to reduce the budget by a million dol-

"Nope," Zweimiller said.

fires due to the amount of fuels. "Since the Konza is located right off two major highways it isn't uncommon for someone to throw out a cigarette or something," Hartnett said. "Because the grasslands are susceptible to fires, we need the best equipment we can get to control both our planned burn-offs and unplanned wild fires."

During the month of April, con-

"I am pleased thus far with the quality of renovation and the progress that we are making," Hartnett said. "The Konza Prairie is known better on both the national and international level than it is locally. We hope to create more awareness around this area."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SECTION

It starts with four little words.

WILL YOU MARRY ME?

It ends with two big words.

I DO.

Everything between those words can be costly, chaotic and confusing.

The Collegian publishes a bridal special section around this time every year to help students take a look at a few of the things that can make life hectic for soon-to-be newlyweds.

Three Collegian staff members give their views on the perils of engagement, marriage and divorce. See page 2.

Sometimes the hardest part of planning a wedding is getting everyone dressed. Especially the bridesmaids.

"The style of all of the bridesmaids came in different shapes and sizes," Sira Sidiki, junior in finance, said, laughing. Simply getting down on one knee and proposing was too cliché for Paul Horton, who sought to make the occasion memorable.

"This is something you only get to do — hopefully only get to do — once in your life," Horton, senior in fine arts, said. "Do it big, and do it fun, and make it something you'll be proud to tell your kids about."

Wedding cakes come in all shapes and sizes. For small weddings, a simple sheet cake will do, but multiple-tier ensembles work for larger ceremonies.

Vern's Donuts & Cakes in Manhattan has been decorating cakes for 15 years.

Switzer, Hershey's Kisses = marriage

oach Barry Switzer helped bring my fiancee and me together.

It happened after I had been working for the Collegian for about a month. I had almost decided that my boss, Derek, didn't like me. That was depressing, since, believe it or not, the real reason I joined the Collegian wasn't for the money and fame.

I wanted to meet Derek, a talented, intelligent, handsome sports writer and editor. Ever since the day our eyes met across a crowded public relations class, a little voice kept telling me, "You must meet this man.

So after accepting the idea that maybe I wasn't quite as charming as I thought, I decided to focus my attention on my sports writing and try to ignore Derek. I was busy doing just that during one of my on-call shifts at the paper when he approached me.

"Is this your book?" he asked, holding up my Barry Switzer autobiography, "Bootlegger's Boy," that I'd left in the newsroom.

"Yes, it's mine," I said timidly. "I bought it a few months ago. I have a lot of respect for Barry." To my relief, a smile crossed his face. "Barry Switzer is one of my heroes," he said. "This is the best book. I can't believe you like him, too."

Finding common ground with Barry helped both Derek and I overcome our mutual shyness. It was also a turning point in our relationship, eventually leading to one and a half years of dating.

Some time later, Derek told me the first time he saw me walk into Public Relations class, he had a feeling about me. Little did he know or probably imagine that almost two years later, he would be down on one knee, asking me to be his wife.

That monumental event took place just two days after Christmas as we left my home in Hoxie for Elkhart to visit Derek's dad. Between Hoxie and Colby, he asked me if there were any historical places in the area.

I pulled out the map and found a place called Mount Sunflower, the highest point in Kansas, right on the Kansas-Colorado border. We had the whole day, so he said we might stop there and look around. After reaching our turn-off, we drove on a country road for 20 miles, searching for the "majestic" Mount Sunflower. "We should be able to see it by now," Derek kept saying. (I think he was expecting Pike's

Finally, we reached the mount, which was a fenced-in area marked by a tall metal sunflower

As I read the history of Mount Sunflower in the guest book, Derek handed me an oddly shaped gift "I forgot to give this to you on Christmas," he said.

Inside was a plastic candy cane filled with Hershey's Kisses. I thanked him and went back to reading the intriguing history of Mount Sunflower.

Suddenly, the lid popped off the candy cane, scattering Kisses all over the ground. I was picking them up when I came across a flattened one. "Derek, look, this Kiss is all squooshed," I said, picking up the mutant piece of candy.

"You'd better look at that one," he said. Puzzled, I unwrapped the silver foil, exposing a gorgeous diamond ring. After the initial shock and tears subsided, we headed back for the highway, stopping at a gas station in Sharon Springs where I called my mom with the news.

While I can't wait until our big day, Aug. 2, I'll have to admit that getting engaged is pretty overwhelming, especially when you're a college student.

With student teaching, job interviews and graduation taking place this semester, it's hard for me to focus on certain details, like whether the tulips want in my bouquet will wilt, or if I really want to put my brothers in charge of the alcohol.

Despite all of the work and planning looming ahead of me before the big day,

I love being engaged. I love the stunning ring on my finger. I love being introduced as Derek's "fiancee" instead of "girlfriend." Most of all, I love knowing that I'll grow old with my best friend and the love of my life. Thanks Coach Switzer.

Marriage — it's not just about love hen I was in high school, 'Top Gun" was the hit movie, and everyone was infatuated with Tom Cruise.

I was different; I liked Goose. Hell, I lusted after the man. He had a boyish charm, fun-loving attitude and a contagious laugh. The actor's real name is Anthony Edwards. I had such a crush on him, I named my first car

So when I met Todd through a mutual friend, it was love at first sight. He could pass as Edwards' twin. Same receding hair line, same nose, same glasses. Even today, my ex-husband bears a striking resemblance to the character Edwards' plays on the television show, "E.R."

His likeness to the hunk of my dreams does not end with appearance. Todd has a down-home, country charm that is impossible to resist. He is one of the most enjoyable people in the world to be with. The sound of his laughter can warm your soul. He romanced me from the beginning with candlelight dinners and red roses.

Our courtship was short, we were engaged in just a few months and married after dating a little less than a year.

Now, just shy of our sixth wedding anniversary, we are making the final preparations for our divorce. For a few months we have been dividing towels, utensils and everything else we have accumulated since the late 1980s.

Obviously romance, lust and a school-girl crush did not a great marriage make.

We drive each other crazy. I am not kidding. Maybe this comes from knowing a person too well. We have this uncanny ability to push each other to the edge of mental stability.

The bathroom was the first cliff of

I have a habit of not replacing the toilet paper with a new roll when the old one runs out. He swears I purposely don't put a new roll on. But even when I do install new toilet paper, I don't do it right. He informed me that toilet paper is supposed to roll from over the top. I guess this is some cosmic law I was unaware of, Once I used his razor to shave my legs, and you would have thought I had committed a felony punishable by execution. In my defense, an equally heinous crime is repeatedly committed by him, he does not rinse out the sink after shaving and leaves that nasty facial hair scum to solidify. But battles about our bathroom habits are not what ended our marriage.

Just as no one can give one specific reason for getting married, there is no singular reason for a divorce. Divorce happens in the same way a marriage does. Marriage doesn't happen in a church or courthouse. It is not an event, but a series of gradually reached agreements about life and goals. Marriage is a process of shared experiences and quiet conversations.

In my case, divorce is a series of rapidly reached, loud disagreements. I was just to young to be married, I was wed 18 days before I turned 18. I had to have a parental consent statement to obtain a marriage license. Anything you do that requires a note from your mother beforehand, should be seriously reconsidered.

My age and immaturity are not the only reasons my marriage failed. I also blame the government. My exhusband is in the U.S. Army. Being a military wife is a career; it is all onthe-job training, and the pay sucks.

On our first wedding anniversary, he was in Saudi Arabia weathering a desert storm. On our second, he was in Germany, and our third anniversary he spent in London. If separation was supposed to make the heart grow fonder, it failed miserably.

Getting divorced is working out well. Todd is one of my closed friends. He is the best daddy in the whole world and the hardest working soldier the military will ever have. Despite the divorce, we will be together for life because we have children. I look forward to our different kind of life together.

I do still love him. But marriage is not just about love. It is about an unnatural union of two strangers for life.

Occasionally when I go to his house, I notice the shaving scum and, just for old time's sake, switch the toilet paper around. After all we did promise for better or worse.

It might not have worked out, I'm still searching

When I was a little girl, I used to proclaim I would never change my last name. In fact, I even broke up with my fourth-grade boyfriend James Bhat because he said if we were to get married, my last name would have to change.

Boy, how my demands have changed. Now, I would simply be happy if I could just find that one special person to spend the rest of my life with. It wouldn't matter if I had to change my last name to Dinkleheimerschmit or even Banana.

But for me, finding that someone is going to take a lot of time. You see, I've been down that road before. I thought I had found the special person I was to spend the rest of my life with. The name change wouldn't have been so bad, either - Shana Richard.

Anyone who knew me while I was engaged could attest to the fact that I was probably the happiest girl in the world. My fiancee and I were meant to be our frustrations out before we took them out on each other, and it worked. I would read what he wrote and would understand where he was coming from, and he would do the same thing when I wrote in that journal. And sometimes we would just write lovey-dovey things that we knew each other would find. But then the one thing that brought us together ripped us apart - baseball. In June, he was drafted into the minor leagues, and the St. Louis Cardinals sent him packing to a short-season team in New Jersey.

Everything was fine in the beginning. We would talk for about ten minutes everyday unless he was on the road. When they traveled, I usually got a phone call on my answering machine at strange thing. That way, we were able to get hours with the scores and his stats.

My girlfriend, Sadie, and I even risked our friendship to drive the nearly 24-hour trip to New Jersey via her home in Cincinnati to spend time with him and see a couple of his games.

NICOLE

Poell

My grandparents were even able to meet him since the town he played ball in was only 45 minutes from their home just outside of the Big Apple. They loved him. My aunt loved him. My cousins loved him. But that night, my aunt, who is also my godmother and one of my very best friends, took me aside to warn me.

"Are you sure you're both ready for this," she asked.

I adamantly assured her we were, that nothing could ruin our love. She cautioned me that a lot would be in store for us with the chances being high that Chris would make it into the big show one day.

I didn't believe her. I should have. Not even a week later. I received the worst phone call I have ever received to date. My stomach almost fell into my feet.

Chris questioned his preparedness for not only an engagement, but for a long-distance relationship. (1 refused to quit school and wouldn't join him until school was done.) We talked, and we cried, and we cried some more. He decided he just needed time to think about it, and we hung up.

It was all I could do to wait. I couldn't eat. I couldn't speak. I couldn't sleep. The rest of my life hung on what Chris was thinking. Three agonizing days later, he called. It was through. Life in professional baseball was just so different than life in collegiate baseball. He said he found himself surrounded by new experiences and new ideas. He said he found himself changing.

He was changing from someone who knew what he wanted to someone who only knew that he wanted to experience more of what life offered him. I don't blame him for that. I don't blame either of us, and I don't blame baseball.

There is no blame. It was bad timing. But what did I learn from all this? More than you could imagine.

I learned trusting someone with your future is the most wonderful feeling in the world. I learned letting go of someone you love deeply is the worst feeling in the world. I learned life goes on. I learned no matter what, everyone changes

I learned next time I'll be more careful about whether someone does their changing before or after we've committed to each other.

Clothing the bridesmaids

 Affordable, pretty dresses can be found with organization

Rhonda A. Lee staff reporte

> ometimes the hardest part of planning a wedding is getting everyone dressed. Especially the bridesmaids.

'The style of all of the bridesmaids came in different shapes and sizes," Sira Sidiki, junior in finance, said, laughing.

"I want something that will flatter everyone's figure. You've got to think about things like that," Danielle Avery, sophomore in business, said.

Pam Miller, owner of Marie's Bridal Formal Wear and Tuxedos, said the biggest problem she encounters is the vast differences in the body sizes of the bridesmaids.

You have one girl who is 3 feet 4 inches, one who is 8 months pregnant and the next one is a size 40," she Often people pick out a dress

according to what looks nice on the smallest bridesmaid, and it ends up not looking good on the largest one. Miller suggested doing the opposite.

"I would suggest they bring the biggest girl in and try the dress out on her. See what she looks dynamite in,"

After the dresses have been picked out, the next part is usually the kicker.

"Price is a real shock. A lot of them like the dresses but don't like the prices," Miller said.

She suggested finding a shop with an accommodating layaway plan. This makes it easier to pay for the dresses as the money becomes available.

If finances are a problem, which they often are for the student bridesmaid, it is not uncommon for the bride to offer to pay for a portion of

Since styles constantly change, looking for discontinued styles can also help save money.

When the wedding day is decided, look at the discontinued styles of that season and more than likely the price will be lower.

She also mentioned that the dresses being purchased today are more casual and versatile, so they can be used for more occasions ensuring that the buyer gets her money's worth.

will be dished out for the August wedding of Sarah Harrington, junior in speech pathology.

She found a reasonable seamstress and went to a fabric warehouse for the material of the dresses. And to avoid conflict among her bridesmaids, she decided on the style herself.

"I made the decision myself. None of them hated it," Harrington said.

Miller also suggested planning 6 months to 1 year prior to the actual wedding day.

The best way to avoid potential problems is to remain extremely orga-

Plan out as many details ahead of time as possible, Sidiki said. Important dates for details like fittings and buying accessories should be worked out in advance.

She also said the communication between the bride and her bridesmaids is crucial to avoid misunderstandings.

'When you ask them to participate, sit them all down together and decide on a date. Make sure they are in the same room," Sidiki said.

Overall, Miller said it is important to involve the bridesmaids in the planning of the wedding, but remember that it is the bride's big day, and she should make the final decisions.

"Take their opinions, but try not to let them take over," Miller said.

■ Registering alleviates the hassle of receiving duplicate gifts

It's your wedding day. It's the reception following the ceremony.

You're there along with your significant other, and together you're opening the gifts your friends and relatives have bought you for the special day.

Anxiously opening each gift you realize that this is the fourth set of candle stick holders you've opened, the third barbecue set and the second blender.

What do you do?

"I just tried to act surprised no matter what," said Dana Lemke, a 1993 K-State graduate in education.

'When I was getting married, we only registered at the Jones Store Co. and there were some friends that couldn't access our register."

The hassle of multiple gifts has, however, been a declining problem.

The advent of computerized registers at some department stores allows bridal registers to be accessed from any store within the chain.

"Every Dillard's store has a copy of each bride's register," said an associate at the Manhattan Town Center Dillard's. "When someone buys a gift, the computer cross-references it to make sure no one has already purchased anything similar."

But if you do receive that almost inevitable sec-you exchanged it for," Lemke said. "I'd just explain that I got duplicates and hope they understood," Stacey Davis, a recent bride, Another suggestion to consider if you're worried about receiving multiple gifts is to register at stores that have convenient locations.

Also, be realistic with the items you do select for your register.

"This is something you only get to do - hopefully only get to do - once in your life," Horton, senior in fine arts, said. "Do it big, and do it fun, and make it something you'll be proud to tell your kids about."

Angela Kautzi, Horton's fiancée and junior in elementary education, had always dreamed of receiving a dozen roses on the memorable day question when the question was popped. "I think it was almost more important than a ring - the dozen roses,"

Popping

Horton said. After watching several friends marry, Horton said he began pondering how he would go about asking the question.

"It all came to me at once. I remember one time, I was just daydreaming about how - if I got engaged - how I would do it, and it just hit me all at once," Horton said. "I loved it and kept it."

Instead of giving her a dozen roses, Horton decided he would paint a bou-

Because he began the project a week before his studio in West Stadium opened for the semester, keeping Kautzi from discovering the painting was a challenge.

"I had to paint in my room, and she came over a couple of times when I was in there painting," Horton said. "I had my door locked, and I had to come up with quick excuses for why I couldn't come to the door."

The proposal took place in his studio, which had special meaning to

"I'm an art major so the painting studio is where she told me she liked me for the first time," Horton said. "That's kind of where our relationship started.

The day before the proposal Horton told his fiancée he had to work. Instead, he drove to Kansas City to pick up the ring.

On Saturday morning, the couple left to run errands - at least that was what Kautzi thought.

"I told her I had to stop by my new studio to turn off my fan," Horton said. "We went over to the studios, and she parked. She said 'OK' and expected me to run up there and turn it off while she waited in the car. So I said, 'Come up and see my studio.' She said, 'They all look the same," he

"I had to pull out my wallet to get the ring out. At the same time I was getting the key out to unlock the door, and she was just like, 'What are you doing?" he said.

When the door swung open Horton bent down on one knee and then Kautzi saw the painting, which said "Angela will you marry me."

"I was excited and shocked," Kautzi said. "I started crying and hugged him." After the initial shock wore off, the couple raced home to call friends and family, who had been expecting the proposal, Horton said.

"She was on fire," Horton said. "She had said yes, and then on the way back to her apartment to call everybody she said, 'I forgot to say yes, I forgot to say yes, I forgot to say yes - yes, yes, yes.

"I was like, 'You did said yes," Horton said. "'You said yes about 50 times up in the studio. The couple plans to place the

YOU CAN HAVE YOUR CAKE AND EAT IT, TOO

Consider size, shape decoration and color when ordering a wedding cake

Nikki Prentice

edding cakes come in all shapes and sizes. For small weddings, a simple sheet cake will do, but multiple-tier ensembles work for larger ceremonies.

Vern's Donuts & Cakes in Manhattan has been decorating cakes for 15 years.

Janice Hill, owner, said it is important to stick with decorators who have a good history when choosing a cake.

Cake

"Get some references from companies who do business with cake decorators, such as country clubs and hotels," Hill said.

"These people deal with cake people everyday and can give you some direction. One-on-one appointments with decorators help, too."

Look at the caterer's pictures books, and go through cookbooks at the library for style ideas, Hill said.

Michelle White had her wedding cake made at Vern's

"We were new in town and just by chance came across Vern's ad in the phone book. When I went in, Janice sat down with us. We looked through all the albums, and I picked out a cake that day," White said.

white and chocolate cake standing on pillars. It runs about $400.

Price is determined by volume ranging from $1 to $1.50 per slice.

Vern's specializes in using foreign decorating techniques, Hill said. The techniques are taken from different wedding cake traditions around the world.

Rolled icing, for example, is becoming popular in the United States.

"Rolled icing is icing made with vanilla beans and is rolled like pie dough and laid over the cake. It's becoming popular," Hill said.

"Janice can do just about anything. She does a really good job and puts a lot of time and effort into them," White said.

Hill recommends couples to order cakes as soon as the wedding date is set.

"If a wedding is in June or May, I like the couple to order a year in advance and put down a deposit. That way it's a contract since it is such a busy time for weddings," Hill said. "Plus, it takes stress off the couple and reassures they will get what they want."

■ Dillons is the only other wedding cake decorator in Manhattan.

Gwen Dennis, head cake decorator at the east side Dillons, said prices are determined by the size of the cake. Generally, it equals out to $1 a serving "Our average and most popular cake is a three-tier cake and runs $150. Most people decide on this cake then add either satellite cakes or sheet cakes on the sides," Dennis said.

Flavors include traditional white, chocolate, marble, yellow, carrot and strawberry.

Dennis said couples should order three Vern's most popular cake is a three-tier weeks in advance but has had customers order as late as a week before the ceremony

Dillons charges a delivery fee of $25 because some cakes have to be finished at the wedding spot, Dennis said.

Dillons doesn't offer any sugar-free cakes

"Our central plant is working on making sugar-free cakes, but they are having a hard time with the artificial sweeteners," Dennis Bernadine Noel, owner of Bernadine Noel's Cake and Candy Kitchen in Kansas City, Kan., has been decorating wedding cakes for 21 years.

Bernadine's cakes in chocolate and white go for $1 a serving.

"The most popular cake, of course, is the traditional white cake, but cakes are also available in chocolate, spice, strawberry and carrot as well as many other flavors," said Noel, who runs the business out of her home.

Cake taste is what makes Noel's cakes so popular, Noel said.

"I give my cakes a little more TLC. I use a special shortening to make the icing. It isn't greasy and not too sugary. People tell me I have the best tasting cakes around," Noel said.

Noel, who does about six weddings per week, said her collection of Silk 'N Satin silk flowers arrangements adds a nice touch to cakes and are perfect keepsakes. Couples can design a floral arrangement or pick from the already prepared arrangements.

Silk 'N Satin arrangements range from $6.50 to $90, depending on the flowers and White chocolate mints are $9 per 100 and available in roses, hearts, bells and leaf shapes. Each order is dyed to match the wedding colors, Noel said.

Couples need to order cakes at least three months in advance. This way, she said she doesn't get booked too heavily, and it gives the couple peace of mind.

AVERAGE COSTS

Cakes serving less than 150 people cost $1.50 per slice. Cakes of 150 to 300 servings are $1.35 per piece, 300 to 500 servings are $1.20 and $1 each slice for 500 or more servings.

Noel said she does cakes for weddings outside Kansas City, but there is a travel cost.

"The Cake and Candy Kitchen is always happy to give each occasion our personal attention," Noel said. "Because it's special to you, it's special to us."

Fantastic Cakes is another home-based bakery in Kansas City.

Owner Nora Bertrand offers white, chocolate, lemon and marble flavors ranging from $1.25 to $1.75 a slice.

"Customers like the frosting, and the cakes are very moist. I get lots of referrals, so I must be doing something right," said Bertrand.

Bertrand said groom's cakes are still popular. She said three out of four customers order groom's cakes.

The groom-cake tradition came from Europe more than 100 years ago. Traditionally, pieces of fruit cake were thrown at the engaged couple wishing them happiness and to multi-

Then, the rest of the cake was sliced and put in little boxes for the single women to take home. The boxes were sent home with the single women and placed under their pillow symbolizing the girls dreaming of future husbands. Fantastic Cakes sells cream cheese mints and white chocolate mints by the 100. Cream cheese mints are $15, and white chocolate cost $20 an order. Shapes of leafs, hearts, roses and daisies are available.

Bertrand does travel upon request. She said to travel to Manhattan would cost $50.

■ Wedding Expressions in Wichita has been in the cake business for 15 years. Owner Marsha Watson started the full-service bridal company in the early '80s.

Since then, the company has branched seven other stores in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio and Oklahoma.

"White cake is the most popular flavor," Watson said. "We have a secret-store recipe for our white cake. There are seven different flavoring in the cake, and it is very moist. Our frosting has a firm texture so there is no icing waste. The average wedding cake has 15 to 20 pounds of icing on it," Watson said.

Wedding Expressions charges $1.25 per

Watson said groom cakes are fairly popular. The monogrammed cake has two layers of double-chocolate fudge cake topped with a dark-fudge frosting and serves 45 people.

Mints come in cinnamon, peppermint, amaretto and spearmint flavors. Each order is dyed exactly to match the wedding colors,

Planning a wedding can be an extremely stressful job. Hill said the caterers want to help illuminate stress, so by planning months in advance, newlyweds can be assured the cake will be perfectly sweetened when the special

Aside from the traditional "I do," some couples opt to write their own

Poems, songs, prose and loving quotations are just some of the things people use in the marriage ceremony. Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities for the University, performs marriage ceremonies for students in Danforth and All Faiths Chapels.

Fallon said of the ceremonies he has performed, only a small percentage of the couples choose to write their own vows. Instead, he said, many choose to modify the traditional "I "Most take the traditional vows, but give them a more contemporary reading," he said.

They do this by eliminating the words such as thou and thee, and Fallon said a lot of couples take the obey out of the "love, honor and obey.

Of the couples who opt to write their own, many go with extemporaneous or written speeches, poems and even songs.

Vowes

Fallon said he makes a few suggestions to couples for writing their own vows. "The primary thing is a statement of love and a life long commitment to each other and a recognition of God's blessing and His presence in their life together," he said.

Fallon said if the couples wish, he sometimes includes promises along with vows.

"The promises are a statement the couple makes to one another that they will be faithful to each other - a promise of a life long commitment.' he said

Along with the couple, the community present at the wedding ceremony, can also be included in the

"The family and friends are asked to promise their support to the bride and groom," Fallon said.

Some of the more common poems and quotations to be used in marriage vows are 1 Corinthians, in which Paul writes a letter to the Corinthians that deals with love, and a poem from "The Prophet" by Kahlil Gibran, a Lebanese philosopher and poet, Fallon

"I think one of the reasons why couples often like Gibran is because it emphasizes 'although we are one, we have our own individual growth and our own sense of worth," he said.

While many religions don't have much restriction on wedding vows, the Catholic Church is stricter.

Father Mel Long, pastor at St. Thomas More Catholic Church, said the Catholic Church tries to maintain that certain elements, such as a promise of commitment and fidelity, remain in the vows.

For this reason, couples do not write their entire vows, but they follow certain formulas.

Father Long said this is to keep some kind of guideline so none of the important elements of the marriage ceremony are neglected. The couple chooses from several set formulas, and they may add on and enhance accordingly," he said. Enhancement is done by adding a few sentences at the end of the formula they chose. Long said that is left up to the bride and groom. "They usually use something that is unique to their relationship. We leave it up to their own creative

Speaker to talk about human rights

Kara Rogers

The Manhattan Amnesty International chapter will conclude a six-month campaign to raise awareness on the deteriorating human rights condition in Nigeria and Kenya with a forum today.

Anthony Ochiabutor, a representative from Nigerians for Democracy, will speak at 3:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre on the political, economic and environmental situation in Nigeria.

"Students need to be aware that the world is a big place, and just because life is going well here in Kansas does not mean it is the same for the rest of the world," David Schmidt, professor in computing and information sciences, said.

Schmidt said Ochiabutor will reflect on recent events in Nigeria, such as the execution of Nigerian environmental activist Ken Saro-Wiwa.

The speech is an opportunity to raise awareness among the students and the community, said Terri Harris, senior in Spanish and Latin American stud-

"Our campaign ends in February. We wanted to conclude it in a positive way by combining an educational symposium for the campus and community," Harris said. The goal of the campaign has been to focus attention on the deteriorating human rights conditions in Nigeria and Kenya before it escalates into a situation such as Rwanda, Harris said. The campaign has addressed such issues as denial of freedom of expression, use of military tribunals and exploitation of inter-ethnic conflicts by the Nigerian government. "Africa does not get a lot of press coverage. We felt it was important to sponsor an event to make people aware of the situation and what they can do,"

Ochiabutor is a Nigerian American who has been actively involved in organizations focusing on the political, economic and social conditions in Nigeria and is the president of an international consulting firm in Chicago.

Amnesty International is a worldwide, nonpartisan human rights organization that works for the release of prisoners of conscience, fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners and an end to torture, executions, political killings and disappearances.

ue Hu learned to write with a brush when she was growing up in China. She took her brush she used for writing and became a painter.

Hu demonstrated her art to Charles Stroh's Drawing 3 students Thursday afternoon. The students are working on bookmaking projects. Student must bind one of their books in the eastern style to complete the course.

"The touch of your finger on the brush will be revealed on the paper," Hu said.

Sue Hu has been painting with traditional brushes and ink since she was in high school. She has published books of her art and poetry and demonstrated her art to many people.

Stroh said he wanted the students to get an idea of the self-discipline and control that are part of the Eastern tradition, and he brought in Hu to demonstrate brush work to his students.

The class began the afternoon watching a video about the process of making brushes and ink. Because the brushes are made with hair of different animals, including sheep, wolf and horse hair, the process can take an extremely long time.

The process of making ink blocks is also done by hand and is time consuming. "It is pretty interesting. There's a lot of stuff I didn't know, like how they make ink blocks," Chris Haworth, senior in graphic design, said.

Hu then demonstrated to the students how to make horizontal and vertical lines. She ground the ink block into some water on her stone and dipped one of her brushes in.

part 2 in occasional bookmaking series

As her brush flowed across the paper, she explained how important concentration is when doing brush work. "Our mind is not supposed to wander any place else," she said.

The students then went back to their tables and practiced as Hu helped them.

Many students were surprised at how hard a simple brush stroke could be

"It's actually not as easy as it looks," Brian Derenski, senior in graphic design, said. Paul Horton, senior in graphic design, said there is a lot of control one has to master. Jeff Hughes, sophomore in graphic design, said he had tried brush painting before, but he never really knew the technique.

"I've really always liked Chinese culture and art. Everything is fluid," Hughes said. Hu showed students how to make hooks, curves and points with their strokes. She stressed concentration as she showed students how different amounts of pressure on the brush result in different shapes. She also told the students to put feelings into their strokes. "You have sensitivity, you have emotion, but you have to be able to express it beautifully," Hu said. She compared brush strokes to playing the piano or violin. Your fingers are what makes it into an art form, she said. Hu said students could turn their intangible feelings into tangible art work. She told students to get the most out of each stroke.

"One brush stroke should say as many things as it can say," she said. At the end of the day, students worked on a small painting that expressed how they felt.

"I love it. It's interesting. I've always wondered how they do it. It's like an art form," Judy Speer, sophomore in graphic design,

▶ BROWNBACK ANSWERS QUESTIONS ABOUT FINANCIAL AID ISSUES

Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Manhattan, answered questions of Student Senate concerning the Farm Bill, federal budget and other political issues Thursday.

Financial aid was a question brought up by Sean Tomb, arts and sciences senator.

He said he wanted to know the current status of possible financial aid changes because many students are worried that financial aid is going to be cut.

The Perkins and Stafford loans' rate of increase will be scaled, and the Pell Grant will stand where it is, Jackie McClaskey, Brownback's press secretary, said.

She said the total number of students overall who receive student loans is increasing along with the amount of money given.

"The change is in the direct planning and in the graduate school loans and graduate school subsidies," McClaskey said.

Senators also wanted to know how Brownback felt about New Hampshire results and the future of the presidential election. "I think Dole will be the nominee," Brownback said, "I think he will be a strong candidate and a strong president." Balancing the budget and the elimination of extra offices was also discussed. "We don't need all the government that we've got," Brownback said. "We are looking at eliminating the Department of Commerce. The Department of Energy will probably be what we will look at next."

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, inquired about the new farm bill and its differences from the previous farm bill.

Brownback said senators passed the Freedom to Farm bill, which gives farmers seven years to plant any crop they want on 85 percent of their land, and the government will determine what will be done with the remaining 15 percent.

"We're waiting for the House to pass a version similar to the Freedom to Farm bill," he said.

► US, IRAN REACH AGREEMENT

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States and Iran announced a $131.8 million settlement Thursday of Iranian claims against the United States, including compensation for the 1988 shooting down of an Iranian airliner that killed 290 people

The State Department said no U.S. money would go to the Iranian government. Family members of Iranians killed when the U.S. Navy cruiser Vincennes shot an Iran Air A-300 Airbus out of the air over the Persian Gulf on July 3, 1988, will share $61.8 million, the department said. It said the other $70 million in the package will go into bank accounts used to pay off private U.S. claims against Iran and Iran's expenses for the Iran-U.S. Claims

That portion was in settlement of Iranian claims involving banking matters, not the airliner, U.S. officials said.

Contradicting the U.S. statement that the Iranian government was receiving none of the money, Tehran announced the settlement as merely a payment to Iran.

Electoral College selects President

t only takes a majority of 270 votes to be elected President of the United States.

Millions of votes are cast in popular elections in America, but only the 538 votes cast by members of the Electoral College are actually responsible for electing the president.

Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science, said most people think that when they vote, they are directly electing the presi-

"The vast majority of people don't under-stand this system," he said. "The people choose the electors, and the electors choose the

When presidential candidates are on the ballot for the general election in a state, the voters in that state pick the electors from that state. The electors then promise to vote for that candidate.

In all but two states, when candidates win the popular vote for a state, they get all the Electoral College votes from that state.

For example, when George Bush won the to reflect population changes. popular vote in Kansas during the 1992 elections, all six of Kansas' electoral votes went to

Instead of voting directly for Bush, residents of Kansas voted Bush's six selected electors.

The electors' names don't appear on the ballot. Instead, when people vote for a candidate, they automatically vote for the electors that candidate picks, Unekis said.

The six members of the Electoral College then go to Topeka in December of that election year to send their vote to Washington. The Electoral College votes are then totaled up, and the president is elected by votes in the Electoral College, Unekis said.

The number of electors a state has is determined by the number of representatives and senators each state has.

The District of Columbia automatically gets three votes, because it has no representation in Kansas has two senators and four representatives, so Kansas has six delegates in the Electoral College.

Because there is a cap of 435 U.S. representatives, the boundaries are drawn after a census

After the 1990 census, Kansas lost a representative, so Kansas lost an Electoral College vote, Unekis said.

Many people think the Electoral College is out of date and the president should be elected only by popular vote.

In a popular vote, the total vote for each candidate from around the whole country would be totaled to determine a winner.

Jay Yaege, graduate student in plant pathology, said he thinks the United States should get rid of the Electoral College.

"The president is supposed to be elected by the people, not the College," Yaege said.

Scott Powell, junior in psychology, said popular vote would create more of a chance for independent candidates. "It would be better for just popular vote. Then Ross Perot might win," Powell said. Unekis said although he thinks popular vote is a popular concept, it is a simple solution. "Having a popular vote was a very simpleminded solution," Unekis said.

Unekis said some of the advantages to keeping the Electoral College were that small states couldn't be totally ignored because their votes in the Electoral College would be pivotal. He said if the United States went to the popular-vote system, candidates would focus more on the more populated areas in the United States. The candidates would do less campaigning and use the media more to get votes.

Unekis said having popular elections would cause a collapse in political parties, because more people would enter elections if they were solely based on popularity.

Unekis said Kansas usually doesn't get much attention from candidates because candidates usually don't waste a lot of time or money on states they know are going to vote a certain way.

Because Kansas usually votes for the Republican candidate, Democratic candidates will focus on other states they might have a chance of winning, and because the Republican candidate knows he will win Kansas, he doesn't spend a lot of time campaigning in Kansas, Unekis said the states that get the most attention are the states that can go either way in the election and states with a large amount of Electoral College votes.

"The toss-ups are usually the large states," he

Citizens search for jail site

Approximately 60 members of the Manhattan community met Thursday night in the Manhattan fire department headquarters building to establish criteria for finding a new jail site.

The original jail in Manhattan was a 6- by 18-foot stone building built in the center of town in 1868.

The building has expanded over the years and is now the law enforcement center at 600 Colorado St.

Al Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, said there were many problems with the current law enforcement center.

"Electric wiring and plumbing systems are old and severely limit our ability to use equipment of modern technology," he said.

Johnson also said the linear structure of the jail makes it hard to monitor prisoners.

Say goodbye to K-State seniors, Big 8

QUICKread Four Wildcat seniors will be playing their final home game Saturday against the University of Kansas Jayhawks. This game also marks the final Big

8 game to be played in Bramlage Coliseum.

There will be a sense of finality this weekend in Bramlage Coliseum.

For seniors Elliot Hatcher, Brian Gavin, George Hill and Tyrone Davis, this weekend's contest will be the last home game for the foursome as Wildcats.

For K-State, the game will be the final Big 8 match-up in Bramlage before the four Texas schools join the conference and become the Big 12.

For the basketball team, it will be the last chance it will have to defeat Kansas in Bramlage as members of the Big 8, a feat that has yet to be achieved.

And for the fans, it will be the last time this season they will be able to stare a Jayhawk in the face and shout "Rock, Chalk, Chickenhawk, ... " Well, you get the picture.

Here's some items to take note of. K-State is locked in a three-way tie with Missouri and Oklahoma in the conference. While the Wildcats take on Kansas Saturday, Missouri will be playing No. 2 Iowa State at home, and the Sooners will travel to turmoil-filled Nebraska Sunday.

With Big 8 tournament seeds and NCAA tournament hopes on the line, the Wildcats will need all the support they can get. The game is sold out, although standing-room only tickets are still being sold. What is important is how the crowd is involved in the game.

In a post-game interview this week, Hatcher made a plea to K-State fans.

"Hopefully, if things go the same way this time, we will be able to answer them, the crowd will be able to step in, and there will be a close game toward the end. I feel good about being at home. If the fans are in the whole game, they'll be like a sixth man on the court."

direct result of attempts to protect their homeland from the ravages of big oil companies, primarily Shell.

Ken Saro-Wiwa was a poet, environmentalist and human rights activist who led the charge against the ravages big oil had inflicted against his home of Ogoniland in Nigeria. He also served as a government minister and was a popular newspaper colum-year Saro-Wiwa was accused of the murder of four people, a charge that has been internationally condemned as false. He was convicted by a military court, although many inconsistencies surfaced, and his lawyers were routinely denied access to relevant documents. In his opening defense statement Saro-Wiwa said, "The crime of the Ogoni people is that they had the temerity to ask for their rights from the Government of Nigeria and from Shell. In response to the executions. the United States, Britain and almost all western nawithtions drew their ambassadors from Nigeria.

President Nelson Mandela of Shell or any other corporation ever South Africa spearheaded the attempted to influence a sovereign removal of Nigeria from the commonwealth and called the Nigerian leadership an "illegitimate, barbaric, arrogant dictatorship that has murdered an activist using a kangaroo court and false evidence."

You see, though, Nigeria doesn't really care what the international community thinks of it because the oil companies have yet to criticize the action or suspend operations.

This has led many publications and a number of human rights groups to put a share of the blame on Shell and other oil

William Shulz, president of Amnesty International, has said, "Shell is the bulwark of Nigeria's economy, producing almost half its oil. It did not do all it could have done. It had influence which it did not exert." Shell's response to this, as reported in the Nov. 11 New York Times, said, "It is not for a commercial organization like Shell to interfere in the legal processes of a sovereign state such as Nigeria." Uh-huh. I would just be shocked if

So what lessons can a tragedy like this one teach us? First off, we live in a world where money can mean more to a country than condemnation by the international community. Because this seems to be the case, we need to begin to monitor the ethical stances of our multi-national corporations.

Because few of us have a chance to sit on the board of companies such as Shell, we need to make our voices heard in a different way. Boycott its products. Most of these companies care much more about something that will hurt their profit margin than a proper ethical decision.

For those of you who would like to know more about the situation in Nigeria, there will be a talk sponsored by Amnesty International at 3:30 today in the Little Theatre. Anthony Ochiabutor, the president of Nigerians for Democracy, will speak on human rights and the environmental efforts in Nigeria. We all fill our cars with gasoline. Let's just make sure that people don't have to die for it.

Religious right doesn't follow Bible teachings an election year.

One of the special interest groups making its influence known is the block of voters identified as Christian conservatives. They helped Pat Buchanan win the New Hampshire primary Tuesday and helped discourage moderate Republicans such as Colin Powell from running for president at all.

The label "Christian conservative" is hard to live up to. Sadly, Christian conservatives are hardly Christian in their agenda and not even conserv-

The term "conservative" has come to mean many things, but conservatives, like a lot of liberals, usually define themselves as people who want more freedom and less government intervention in their lives.

More freedom and less government intervention, however, is inconsistent with many Christian conservative agendas.

For example, many Christian conservatives favor a Constitutional amendment banning abortion. Without even debating the abortion issue, it is clear that such an amendment would be an enormous federal invasion into the private, even intimate, lives of

One can only imagine those jack-booted thugs from the federal government raiding doctors' offices and hospitals. Many conservatives say the draconian techniques of these agencies are proof the federal government is too big and too oppressive. Believing the federal monster can be used against other Americans but not against themselves is illogical

Conservatives also say they want lower taxes. Lower taxes is hardly a uniquely conservative agenda. Everyone hates paying taxes.

Myview

SCOTT ALLEN Miller

Liberals and conservatives are in disagreement about how the taxes are levied, from whom they're collected and who benefits from the expenditure of the taxes. They are both welfare ideologies

Liberals tend to want to spend billions of tax dollars to help out families and individuals, whether those citizens need it or not. Conservatives tend to want to spend billions to prop up corporations, regardless of how much they need it.

Conservatives claim they want more individual freedom. What they want more individual freedom for people like themselves. Some of the same people who complain about violence in the media attend professional wrestling events. They castigate film directors like John Singleton for making black gang movies like "Boyz N The Hood" but stand in line to buy tickets to see Italian gangsters duke it out in "Casino." Many of them complain that they're persecuted for their religious views but show no respect for people who hold religious views other than

This brings up the question of just how Christian this group is. Certainly they consider themselves Christian, but calling yourself a doctor does not make you one. The same goes for Christianity.

They argue that conservative Christian values are what made this country great. Maybe that's true, but they're also what have helped create the dark side of America as well. The Bible's numerous references to slavery were used by Christians to justify this institution in America for more than 200 years. Genesis 9:25-27 was used to justify the enslavement of people of color specifically. The Bible was also used to justify manifest destiny and the genocide of Native Americans.

Christian conservatives cite Leviticus 18:22 as proof that homosexuality is a sin. Leviticus 20:13 also says people who practice homosexuality are to face the death penalty. It's inconsistent to believe in the former verse and not support the latter. So do Christians support killing gays or tolerance? There are no other choices.

And how many Christian conservatives do you know observe the Sabbath?

Much of the Christian conservative agenda is focused on rewarding successful Americans and denying assistance for the poor. This is rather inconsistent with Jesus' own words. He said, "If you would be perfect, go, sell what you possess and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me." (Matthew 19:21)

In fact, the ambition that propels capitalism may be at odds with Jesus' teachings. In Luke 3:14, Jesus commanded people to be content with the money they make. And the New Testament is rife with condemnations of rich people. Was Jesus a pinko liberal? He sure wouldn't get the GOP presidential nomination these days.

Jesus was speaking to the political leaders of today when he said "You have a fine way of rejecting the commandment of God, in order to keep your

There is a blasphemous mixture of politics and religion at work in American politics. Perhaps it would be worthwhile to give up politics for Lent.

▶ KANSAS REPRESENTATIVES HELPING DISMANTLE EPA

Economists are interested in how people change their spending patterns as their incomes go up. Families who experience a big jump in their income will often buy a new and higher quality car, search for a nicer neighborhood and a more upscale house.

These products are designated as normal products. This means that as the incomes of families increase, they will buy more of that product. In the case of houses, this pattern is demonstrated by the money spent on purchasing more and higher quality living space. Some products are inferior ones. As a family's income increases, it may actually buy less of an inferior product, such as a poor quality cut of meat or used versus new car. The Earth's environment is also a product that all of us consume, and by our actions, we can enhance or degrade it. The new class of freshman representatives in Congress, two of which are from Kansas, are acting as if middle-class Kansans think the environment is an inferior good. They are voting to weaken our national standards and the Environmental Protection Agency. They do not understand that the environment is a normal product, and most of us are willing to buy more of it as our incomes go up, not less. We do this by recycling our trash, fixing our cars when they pollute, making our homes more energy efficient and taking family trips to out beautiful national parks. We cannot, however, buy a better environment exclusively in the mar-

The ever-revolving evolution of local bands

Manhattan bands may come and go, but they still manage to survive band tracking by Page Getz

rom the skeletons of deceased bands, local music evolves and takes on new incarnations or just new names. But live music is happening, even in Manhattan, despite the rumors.

Some argue it is a simple manifestation some argue it is a simple manifestation of the laws of supply and demand, in which lack of support for live bands has caused local venues to become hesitant to feature live music.

Others complain that the existence of live music is no more than a fictitious phantom that doesn't happen in the musically deprived Little Apple.

In actuality, most of the binding key players of instrumental Manhattan-based bands have divided, congregated and integrated within the circuit.

The remains of these past incarnations of extinct Manhattan bands develop an extended family made up of talented musicians who can hold their own weight and hold together the fabric of the local live music scene.

"The renaissance stage of the local music scene was about four years ago, when there was the Moving Van Goghs, Roach Factory, Tuber, Puke Weasel and Truck Stop Love," said Brad Huhmann, bass guitarist for Truck Stop Love. "It was like the Roman era of local music."

The roots of these bands flourish in other less-acknowledged entities trying to survive despite such limited opportunities in venues locally and indifference from students.

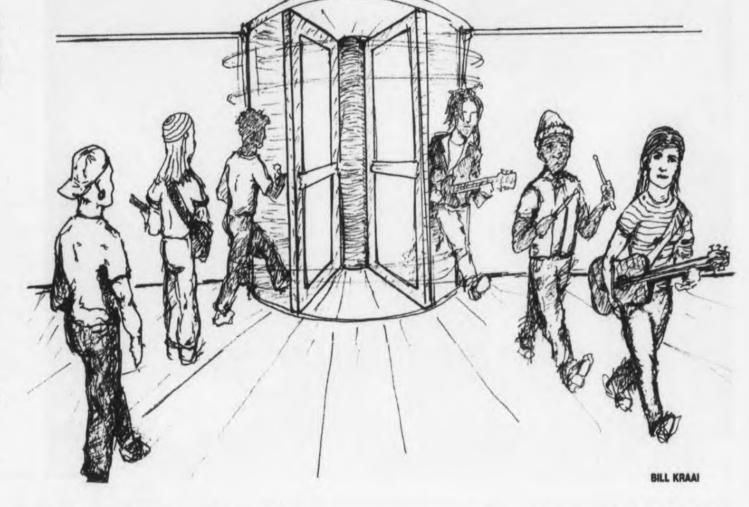

"When Truck Stop got signed, they got a lot of attention. There was a lot of hope that Manhattan might get a lot more attention, but it just never happened," said Dan Lee, bass guitarist for El Fontain, formerly Ten Thumb, formerly Yaz Pistachio.

"The loss of Roach Factory and Moving Van Goghs was the most disappointing, because they were so symbolic of the scene," Lee said. "They had this sort of psychedelic layering of noise, but the bands still sort of mutate from one to another."

Members of Moving Van Goghs make up Sufferbus and Truck Stop Love. Survivors of Roach Factory landed in

Puke Weasel added a member of Carpet

Burn, becoming Spine and later Scully.

"It's harder to draw a crowd now," Alan Keithley, drummer for Scully, said. "We'll appeal to a crowd, and then they'll graduate. The crowd is always revolving, and so the following is always changing."

Bands here take a lot of criticism for not measuring up to the Lawrence standard, but most Lawrence-based bands playing in Manhattan have had about the same turnout as locals.

"There's entirely too much pressure put on the Manhattan music scene," John Evans, guitarist for El Fontain, said. "It's constantly compared to bigger, thriving scenes. It's like saying the Foo Fighters are better than Nirvana. You can't do it. They're two different bands."

Unlike Lawrence, which is sometimes considered narcissistic, humility and mutual respect among local Manhattan bands serve as a nexus of support for them.

"We all know each other, and it's pretty concentrated here," Eric Melin, drummer for TSL, said. "Bands here are less concerned about being rock stars overnight and It's harder to draw a crowd now. We'll appeal to a crowd, and then they'll graduate.

are a little more realistic."

Many bands credit lack of interest and support of local bands as the reason there aren't more live shows.

It isn't that live music doesn't happen. It's that when it does happen, so often people don't notice or care.

"There is no scene in Manhattan, but if you don't go to shows, then bars aren't going to have them," Ralph Reichert, vocalist for the Invisibles, said. "Any chance of anyone making it in this town is by getting out of this town.

"There's no support from bars, and the management isn't willing to be financially responsible for live bands," he said. "Drunk GIs are cheaper."

With younger bands like Ultimate Fake Book, Chick Scalletti, Come July, Smudge and Back Porch Mary progressing, there is a lot of potential, but there is little faith in the fate of the local music.

"There are less people willing to get involved for the sake of supporting the bands, and there are less bars willing to deal with it unless it's a guaranteed moneymaker," Andrew Sample, vocalist for Scully, said. "But the only way to get the national acts is to get a local one going."

The myth of extremes that divide bands into a rigid equation of those that have been discovered versus the non/pre-MTV-blessed bands creates an expectation that assumes if a band name isn't recognizable, then it must be just a lost pack of drop-outs or unemployed slackers.

"When we started, there were more people that went to the shows, but then the alternative thing hadn't hit the mainstream yet," Melin said. "Now, if they don't see it on MTV, they think it's no good."

What makes this equation more of an ill-fated paradox in the interest of the bands is that if it does actually penetrate into some kind of mainstream commercial success and does too well, then it's no longer considered genuinely alternative.

The scene isn't lacking talent or fertility.

It lacks support.

"The scene goes in waves," said Derek Macy, guitarist for the Invisibles and former member of Roach Factory. "There will be a lot of music interest and support, and then it'll die down for a while.

K-State will try to ride the momentum from its win against Missouri Wednesday night into its second annual meeting against Kansas tomorrow in Bramlage Coliseum.

In the first game, the Jayhawks beat the Wildcats 72-62 in a game where the Cats led at halftime 34-30. The Jayhawks came out of the half on a 17-8 run and never looked back.

"We played a good first half," senior point guard Elliot Hatcher said.

"The second half they came out on a run, and we weren't able to answer them." Hatcher said.

"Hopefully, if things go the same way this time, we will be able to answer them, and the crowd will be able to step in, and there will be a close game toward the end

"I feel good about being at home. If the fans are in the whole game, they'll be like a sixth man on the court," he said.

"I'm pretty confident it will be a good game, and I'm hoping it will be a closer game than it was in Lawrence."

Hatcher had 30 points in the first contest but said his scoring in this game was not going to be "I scored 30 points last game, and we lost. So this time I'm going to go out and try to get some more assists and do other little things," Hatcher "The coach is always telling me to shoot the ball, and my job is to score, but this time I'm going to see if I can get more people involved, and if my points come, they come.'

Reserve guard Aaron Swartzendruber said the key to tomorrow's game is coming to play.

'We need to come out and play with the same intensity and poise like we did against Missouri and take the confidence we gained into Saturday," Swartzendruber said.

"I think any time you play at home in the Big 8, you have a little bit of an advantage, and I think we'll come out and play confident."

Plaguing the Cats have been a string of Jayhawk victories in Bramlage.

Since the team moved from Ahearn Field House to Bramlage, K-State has not been able to win at home against its intrastate rival in their last 12 meetings.

Wednesday night's win against Missouri was the first win in the month of February with Coach Tom Asbury at the helm.

Asbury is 1-8 as the Cats' coach in February, a figure which clashes with the 39-9 record he posted during his realm at Pepperdine.

Even without a win against Kansas in his career, Asbury said this game meant no more to him than any other. "This game is probably huge to a lot of people, but it doesn't mean a whole lot to me," Asbury "I'd like to beat them, and I'll tell you that a win against them would help us get into the NCAA tournament. If we beat them, we'll be in the hunt, and it would be a huge win."

Did anybody see the Kansas City Star's egocentric, bandwagon bashing, columnist's prediction of the K-State vs. Kansas game in Tuesday's edition of the Star?

Well, for those of you who missed it, the columnist, (who shall remain nameless), predicted K-State to defeat Kansas 72-It might be interesting to note Mr. Columnist also picked K-

Wednesday night's victory against the Tigers and the Collegian's coverage in Thursday's paper, Mr. Columnist was almost right. The final score of the game was 69-64.

If Mr. Columnist's predictions hold true, it should be a close contest, but just how close will it be?

Kansas came out of intermission in the Feb. 4 contest in Lawrence with a 17-8 scoring run, led by forward Raef LaFrentz and freshman Paul Pierce.

LaFrentz scored a career-high 24 points against K-State's Gerald Eaker and Tyrone Davis. Pierce dumped an additional 14 points on the scoreboard.

Inside, K-State's game will be up in the air, literally.

Eaker is averaging 2.5 blocked shots per game, enough to be ranked second in the conference.

Eaker is also averaging 7.4 points and 5.1 rebounds per game. Davis is third on the conference list in rebounding, averaging 8.7 boards per game. He has nine double-double games this season and is second in the conference in field goal percentage, shooting a solid 53.2 percent. Davis is averaging 14.3 points per game and 8.6 boards.

Davis' status is also in the air, however, following a sprained ankle in Wednesday night's win. Wasn't that a rush when Davis ran up the tunnel and gave high-fives to fans all the way to the bench? It was refreshing to see someone give his all for a win, and Davis did jut that. Hopefully his fans will return the favor Saturda, because his ankle is a serious concern to Coach Tom Asbury.

What will catch Kansas off-guard, however, is senior guard

Hatcher, who has been recovering from a lung inflammation caused by the flu, has been in a shooting slump of late. Against Missouri he shot only 3-of-18 from the field and had only a 10point game against Oklahoma State before the break Cat fans should expect an explosion from the Hatch. Before ne ill in Stilly iter, Okla., Hatcher was on a rol ing 25.7 points in the three games at Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas. He averaged two steals per game, 5.7 rebounds and four assists. The conference's leading guard, Hatcher was 23-of-47 from the field, 11-of-19 from three-point land and missed only 3-of-24 charity buckets.

And what about Aaron Swartzendruber? I know a few young ladies who were excited about Swartz's career-high game, but all Cat fans should have been excited. There's a lot to look forward to from this reserve guard.

This guy is only a sophomore, and look what he's done for K-State's game this season. He is the Big 8's secondleading bench scorer in conference play, averaging 7.8 points per game. Only Oklahoma's Dion Barnes averages more. Last season, he averaged 1.2 points per game. If he improves next year as much as he did this season, Swartzendruber should easily take over Hatcher's position

Mark Young has a lot to gain from a big game against Kansas. After K-State's embarrassing postseason loss last season and a tough loss in Lawrence, Young has said several times he wants nothing more than a Wildcat victory over the Freshmen sensations Shawn Rhodes and Ayome May should fit nicely into K-State's plans over the next three years.

Rhodes' 13 points at Colorado, his first career start, were the most by a freshman in his first career start since Askia Jones' 14 points against Oklahoma in 1990. Rhodes could be another Jones. Imagine the possibilities.

May also has been making a splash on the court. In K-State's home victory against Marshall, May had 18 points, the most by a K-State freshman since Brian Henson scored 21 at Oklahoma.

My prediction for tomorrow's game? Kansas 68, K-State 76. So, who are those Kansas Jayhawks, anyway?

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Wildcats, Hawks to battle for pride

Dan Lewerenz

It's easy to see how K-State and Kansas might lack motivation going into Sunday's season finale in Lawrence.

After all, Kansas has already clinched the No. 1 seed in the upcoming Big 8 Tournament, and with tight races for the 2-4 spots and the 5-8 spots, the Wildcats' position and opponent will be influenced as much by other games as by their own. But then again ..

"It's KU," interim coach Jack Hartman said. "There's a great deal of pride in that game, and that in itself is all the incentive you need.'

And it's not just another KU vs. K-State game. On Jan. 28 in Manhattan, the Jayhawks handed K-State one of its most embarrassing losses of the season, a 51-38 drubbing in which the Cats hit 24.6 percent of their shots.

The Cats will have to turn up the defensive intensity if they want the outcome to be different this time - especially on the perimeter, where all three of Kansas' starting guards are averaging 12 or more

Preseason Big 8 Player of the Year Charisse Sampson averages 12.6 points, 3-point ace Angie Halbleib averages 14.5, and Tamecka Dixon's 17.4 points per game are good for second in the confer-

"That creates a problem, because they've got good inside people," Hartman said. "You can't extend your defense too much, or they'll take advan-

The Cats will get some help in the post with the return of junior Andria Jones to the line-up. Jones was averaging 13.6 points, a team-high 6.7 rebounds and 1.7 steals per game before an ankle injury in the first half against Nebraska forced her to sit the last four games.

Hartman said Jones has recovered well and should play against Kansas.

"She had a pretty good full practice yesterday, and she seems to be coming along well," he said.

Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson leads the Cats with 14.4 points per game, with junior wing Missy Decker adding 10.1 points per game.

Wildcats, Razorbacks to take field

Shana Newell

The K-State baseball team is in Fayetteville, Ark., this weekend as it prepares to take on Arkansas.

The Wildcats are 5-0 on the season, averaging 18 runs per game while the Razorbacks are 10-0 to start the season. The Hogs defeated Southwest Missouri State Wednesday in a 6-0 shutout. Before that game, Arkansas was hitting a solid .357 as a team and in nine games had scored 119

K-State coach Mike Clark said defense and relief pitching will be the focus of the team against Oklahoma.

"I'm really proud of how our uys have been doing," he said. "But there's still things to improve on. Defensively, we need to concentrate more. Our relief pitchers need to get more outings under their belts and learn to be more consistent.'

Arkansas' leading hitter is third baseman Matt Erickson, who was hitting .548 going into the SMSU game. He also had 18

Poepard, has four home runs with 17 RBIs and three doubles. He is hitting .615. Add to those stats three stolen bases, and Poepard is off to a powerful start this season.

Hess is in the middle of a school-record race. With four more one-hit games, Hess will break the K-State record for hitting in consecutive games set by Otto Kaifes in 1987 at 25. In 27 at-bats, Hess has 15 hits, including one home run, four doubles and 17 RBIs.

Men's, women's golf teams begin spring in Texas in first competition since November

Trevor Grimm

K-State's golf teams haven't hit the links since November, but the action starts again this weekend in Texas as they try to prove the time off hasn't weakened their game. The men's team, idle since Nov. 14, competes in the 54hole Crown Colony Invitational Friday and Saturday in Lufkin, Texas, while the women's team, idle since Oct. 31, competes in the 54-hole Texas A&M Bookstore Tournament Monday and Tuesday in the spring season for the golf squads, which climaxes in late April with the Big 8 Championships in Hutchinson (men) and Des Moines, Iowa (women).

The men's team is looking for a strong spring, as all five starters return from last year, when the Wildcats finished fifth in the Big 8.

"I expect a lot from this team," men's coach Mark Elliott said. "This team should really be able to challenge for an NCAA regional berth. These guys know they can play with anybody in the field. Now it's just up to them to do it."

The Cats feature four returning seniors: Halterman, Scott Hovis, Jason Losch and Chad Myers. Halterman nabbed two tournament victories last season, while Hovis qualified for NCAA regionals after placing 15th in the Big 8 tournament. Myers placed 18th at the Big 8

The fifth starter for the Cats is junior Chad Buckridge. Buckridge placed 11th at the Big 8 tournament last year and holds a share of the Manhattan Country Club course record at 63, seven under par. Ironically, Elliott is the co-holder of that course record.

The women's team will have a new look this season, as the Cats will feature two freshmen in their fivesome Monday and Tuesday, as well as a first-year coach in Kristi Knight. "It's a nice combination, because I have four seniors on the roster and nine freshmen and sophomores," Knight said. 'On one hand, we're a veteran team, but on the other hand, we're very young. But I'm excited about the freshmen and sophomores."

K-State will send seniors Trisha Hoover, Richelle Bond and Staci Bush, along with freshmen Jane Yi and Jennifer Omohundro, to the College Station tournament.

'Hobbit' offers life-size puppets, engaging energy

staff reporter

Life-sized puppets will perform on McCain Auditorium's stage at 7 p.m. Sunday, when the Theatre Sans Fil presents an adaptation of J.R.R. Tolkien's

The Theatre is well-known for an unusual style of puppetry, Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

The puppets' sizes range from 3 to 7 feet tall, and the puppeteers can be seen by the audience, Andre Viens, artistic director of the Theatre Sans Fil, said.

"Our style is based on the Japanese Bunraku style of puppetry, but we adapted it to fit our own style," he said. One of Viens' adaptations was to create a soundtrack to go along with the performance.

effects, projections

ANDRE VEINS

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

"The puppeteers do not give the text from the stage, but it's prerecorded on the soundtrack with music," Viens said. "That way, we can use special effects on the voices, but more importantly, we can reach a new big level in puppetry because the performers can put all their physical energy into the arts to manipulate and give soul to the puppets."

Physical energy is important in such a performance, Viens said, considering the puppets range in weight from 7 to 25 pounds. "It's very heavy when the puppets are over you," he said. "But our goal is to make the movements very fluent so that the audience never knows how heavy the puppets really are.'

Martin saw the Theatre Sans Fil perform an excerpt from the "Hobbit" a few years ago in a showcase put on by the government of Quebec.

"It was an engaging performance, and the size of the giant puppets really struck me," he said. "I thought it was likely to appeal to the people in our audience here." In addition, Martin said he thought McCain was well-suited to the production. "Because of the puppets' size, they can play in this house, and the audience can have a very satisfying experience, I believe," he said. The story of the "Hobbit" also has special considerations, Viens and Martin said. "The 'Hobbit' is very hard on our puppeteers, but it's one of our best shows," Viens said. "It's like mixing giant puppetry, special effects, projections and black Martin said the show should appeal to all ages.

"As a good writer, Tolkien has written the story on a couple of levels. Children will enjoy it because of the story on the surface, but students and adults shouldn't stay away because they think it's a children's show adults can get a lot out of it, too." Tickets are $15 for general public, $13 for senior citizens and $7.50 for K-State students and children. They may be purchased at the McCain Box Office, the K-

MABITAT FOR HUMANITY

Students to live in shack for 2 days

Mikki Tice

Habitat for Humanity Week will begin Monday with members starting two days of living in a shack in front of the K-State Student Union. Their goal is to increase awareness and raise funds for the organization.

"The week begins with a candlelight vigil at 6 p.m. in the Union Pedestrian Island on February 26," Kevin Miller, president of Habitat for Humanity, said.

Following the vigil, members of Habitat will stay in a shack until Wednesday to start a fundraiser with a goal of $35,000 during the next year. The money will be used to build a house for a member of the Manhattan community who is in poverty housing.

"An ideal situation would be for each student on campus to donate $1 per semester. Then we would have more than enough money to build a house," Micki Burns, Habitat for Humanity week co-chair, said.

The K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity is a ecumenical Christian organization with a goal to abolish poverty housing throughout the world.

Burns said members of the chapter will be speaking to groups on campus to increase awareness of Habitat to the student body during the week.

Interested? There will be a meeting at 9 p.m. Thursday in Durland 173.

Broadcast to connect national exchange of environmental ideas

K-State students can share ideas for creating environmentally sustainable communities during a national interactive teleconference Monday.

► TELECONFERENCE

The teleconference, "Environmentally Sustainable Communities: A National Town Meeting," will originate from Washington, D.C., and broadcast live from 2:30 to 4 p.m. in Waters 137. The term sustainability, in its pure form, means being able to live off the resources that are readily available, said Jim Ploger, energy program manager for Kansas Corporation Commission. Although conservation is an important element of sustainability, it doesn't necessarily require as much personal sacrifice as it used to, Ploger said.

With all the new products on the market, such as better insulation and motion detectors that automatically turn the lights off when they sense that there isn't any activity in a room, conservation doesn't mean cutting back on your lifestyle anymore," Ploger said.

During the broadcast, a five-member panel with a moderator will encourage debate and answer viewer questions concerning the issues at hand.

National and regional figures such as Henry Cisneros, secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, and Emanuel Cleaver, mayor of Kansas City, Mo., will be included on the panel.

Renew America, a national organization that promotes environmental initiatives, is sponsoring the teleconference, which will also be broadcast in Topeka at the Washburn University Student Union.

There will be no charge to attend the broadcast, and anyone interested is invited to participate, Ploger said.

Zweimiller said he thought the way the bill passed will not hurt students as much. "I think we can make things work with it so students can save money," he said.

Zweimiller said he would have to look into the possibility of cuts and the implementation of a user fee.

Before senators reached a decision, many opinions were expressed concerning the fee increase.

"Some people may get up here and say I'm selfish," he said. "I believe we can do this without a fee increase."

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said he also opposed a fee increase.

housands of acres burned Sunday afternoon as a wildfire spread through the rairie Research Natural Area, causing Kansas Highway 177 and McDowell Creek Road to be closed for most of the day.

An unidentified Kansas Highway Patrol officer said the fire was started off Exit 311 on westbound 1-70.

"It looks like someone tossed out their cigarette butt and started the fire," he said.

Geary County Fire Chief Bill Deppish said someone probably took a break and that is how the fire was Deppish said he would not speculate on the cause of the fire.

"We are rerouting people away from here," said Rand Conrad, conservation officer with the Kansas Wildlife and Parks Service, who was at the I-70 and K-177 exit.

Conrad said people were being directed to K-18 in Manhattan.

"It is a big fire," he said. "This here is going to be a long fire, I am Firefighters from Riley County, Geary County, Fort Riley and Milford Township battled the fire all afternoon and into the evening.

'This is considered a rural fire, and we have not needed help from city crews yet," Conrad said.

Mike Mann, deputy with the eary County Police Department and volunteer firefighter, said the fire was moving so fast by the time they knocked it down that it had started back up again.

"It is a losing battle," he said. The fire kept changing direction, Mann said.

"Right now we are battling the fire by the buffalo pen," he said, which has an electric fence around it, and I ain't cutting it.'

Mann said he did not know if there were any buffalo in the pen at the time of the fire.

"If the fire changes direction, it is dangerous definitely," said the owner of Sam's Food Mart, which is located off I-70 on Highway 177 and also on the edge of the Konza Prairie.

K-State researchers develop new way to kill beef bacteria

Pasteurization with steam kills using heat, pressure

John Berggren

K-State researchers spent the last 15 months perfecting and testing a process of steam pasteurization for beef carcasses, which reduces E. coli risk factors and might revolutionize the beef

"This is huge to the meat industry," said Randy Phebus, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry. "This process especially with the other microbiological processes we have, are giving us the best quality microbiological meat in history. I would say we're at a point of revolution in the industry.'

Frigoscandia, a meat processing company based in Belvue, Sweden, invented the theory for steam pasteurization and brought the idea to K-State for testing.

Steam pasteurization is a process in which beef carcasses are put into a slightly pressurized, enclosed chamber at room temperature and sprayed with steam that blankets and condenses on the entire carcass, causing the surface temperature of the beef to jump to 195 or 200 degrees Fahrenheit almost instantly. This kills nearly all pathogens found on beef. The carcasses are then sprayed off with cold water to complete the process.

They brought the idea to K-State, and we did all the original testing to see how much steam we could apply without hurting the color of it and still effectively killing the bacteria on it," Randy Phebus, assistant professor of animal sciences, said.

AGLER TO TRANSFER TO ADMINISTRATIVE POSITION

In a statement released Friday evening, K-State announced Brian Agler has accepted an administrative reassignment to the Office of the Vice President for Institutional

Agler, who was suspended as women's basketball coach on Feb. 9, will be responsible for researching and developing program proposals for a variety of issues, said Bob Krause, vice president for Institutional Advancement.

Those issues will include sports logo licensing and other external relationship areas that will emerge as new areas of emphasis in University and athletic administration.

Agler said he made his decision because of his concern for everyone involved. "I made the decision based upon my assessment of the total situation and what I felt to be in the best interest of the program, our student-athletes and for me personally," he said in the release. "It affords me the opportunity to gain some new experience and assess my longrange career goals."

▶ UNIVERSITY COUNSELING SERVICES DEVELOPS ASSESSMENT PROGRAM

With student resources scattered all over the K-State campus, many students who need academic support are left wondering where to turn.

For those students University Counseling Services is preparing to offer a program to give students direction in their learning.

Learning Enrichment and Assessment Program, LEAP, is a program that will offer learning assessment assistance to K-State students.

The first step for students in the program will be to take a written assessment of how they

The assessment will look at learning as many different pieces making up a whole individual, said Ann Johnson, counselor at University Counseling Services and one of the planners of the LEAP program.

"It's like pieces of a pie," she said, "when you look at what goes into making a good student. It includes study skills, moods, a support network and many other things." Dan Wilcox, therapist at University Counseling Services and a planner of the LEAP program, said this sort of an evaluation is an important part of LEAP's design.

"We're trying to get a more holistic view of a student's learning and well-being through the assessment process," he said, "and this goes beyond study skills. It includes their motivation, how they are supported at home, and many other factors that can affect the way a student learns. This assessment, Johnson said, is to help students see how their weaknesses affect learning.

After the written assessment, students will interact with the staff and other students in the program to begin tapping into the resources already offered at

"We are hoping to bring all the resources on campus to one place," Wilcox said, "and become the place that knows all that's happening with learning enrichment on this campus. That way, we will be able to show students what resources that already exist that can help them strengthen their weaknesses." Beyond that, Wilcox said, students are left to make their own decisions.

'We are by no means a parent who will make decisions for people. We just help guide and support their choices," he said.

In addition, the group will always be there for further support or assistance, although there is no specified length of time a student must participate in LEAP, Johnson said.

"The student's commitment to the program is individualized, depending on the needs of the person," she said.

Wilcox said, students should not be afraid to try the program, regardless of their present academic performance.

"We want to address a full range of learning needs, which means we have the resources to help not only those students who are struggling, but also those who are doing well and are just wanting to explore how much better they can do," Johnson said.

CLINTON PROMOTES UNIFORMS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Drawing on the politically popular themes of fighting crime and strengthening families, President Clinton today championed the idea of requiring youngsters to wear school uniforms as a means of instilling discipline and order.

Pointing to a rash of youth crimes across the country, Clinton said, "School uniforms are one step that may be able to help break this cycle of violence. truancy and disorder by helping young students to understand that what really counts is what kind of people they are - what's on the inside."

To underscore his point, Clinton was to visit Jackie Robinson Academy, a public school in the Long Beach Unified School District, which boasts it was the first in the country with a mandatory uniform policy in all elementary and middle classes.

Clinton also signed a directive instructing the Education Department to distribute a manual on school uniforms to all 16,000 school districts in the United States. He said it would provide a road map for schools to adopt a uniform policy, but Washington was not telling anyone what

► TENSIONS ESCALATE WITH CUBA

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Clinton administration on Sunday decried Cuba's downing of two small American planes as "a blatant violation of international law," but its only immediate response was to seek punitive actions from the United Nations.

As President Clinton considered a range of other options, the incident catapulted the Cuban-American relations to the forefront of debate just two weeks before Florida's delegate-rich presidential primary.

Lawmakers sought to rally support for a tougher trade embargo on Cuba, a matter that is pending on Capitol Hill. And GOP presidential candidates demanded decisive action, portraying Clinton as soft on Fidel Castro.

"Instead of siding with Castro in opposing tougher sanctions, President Clinton should now voice his support for tightening the Cuban embargo. Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said.

Dole's rival for the nomination, Pat Buchanan, said U.S. planes should patrol international waters off Cuba. If Cuban planes attack planes in those waters, "I would shoot the Cuban planes down," Buchanan said.

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are taxdeferred annuities designed to help build additional assets - money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on federal and, in most cases, state and local income taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

on assets under management, we offer a wide range of allocation choices - from the TIAA Traditional Annuity, which guarantees principal and interest (backed by the company's claims-paying ability). to TIAA-CREF's diversified variable annuity accounts. The parking lot behind Weber Arena was filled with pick-up trucks pulling horse trailers. Inside, the odors of leather, horses, cattle and manure created a ranch-like smell.

Rodeo prides itself on being a celebration of the Old West and a test of the skills that are necessary for efficient ranch work.

Five hundred nine students from various schools throughout the Midwest competed in all nine professional rodeo events, including 30 members of the K-State Rodeo Team. Ryan Vessar and T.K. Dawdy competed in team roping for the second year. The event requires one cowboy to rope a steer's horns, while the other ropes his back heels, a skill used to doctor animals on ranches.

Vessar, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said cooperation between both cowboys and the horses they were riding was imperative to a good time.

He said he enjoys other aspects of team roping as well.

"I like the adrenaline flow right before you come out and the thrill of being able to have a competitive time," he said.

Saturday night, Vessar and Dawdy, senior in animal science, recorded a time just short of the 8.8 seconds needed to qualify for the Vessar said he also likes the chance to win money by competing at the rodeo.

Calf roping, ladies' break-a-way and goat tying showcase a rider's ability to catch and control an animal.

Barrel racing is more of a display of equestrian skill and dexterity, and two members of the K-State team were good enough to make the final round, but they were not fast enough to place in the final round.

The crowd was lively for all the events, but the riding events brought the loudest

K-State's Jimmy White, senior in animal science and industry, placed fifth in the bareback bronc riding and Dave Katzer, senior in journalism and mass communications, went to the final round with a score of 70 out of 100 in the saddle bronc riding, but he couldn't hold on for the required eight seconds to record a score on Sunday.

Every night the crowd erupts for what the announcer called the most dangerous sporting event in the world - bull riding.

Bull riding is the event that made the rodeo famous.

"It's living on the edge," Matt Davis of the Western Oklahoma State College Rodeo Team said. "Putting everything on the line for eight seconds is quite a thrill."

Davis, sophomore in agricultural business, was competing in his second KSU Rodeo, and he said he had a good impression of the event.

"It's one of the best rodeos we got," he said. "The Saturday night crowd beats any other crowd we go to in college rodeo."

Davis scored a 71 to make the final round, and his score of 76 was good for third place overall in the event.

To entertain the crowd between events, the rodeo uses clowns. K-State hired professional clowns Jim McLain and Aaron

The clowns act silly and distract the crowd with antics as the announcer gibes them, but they play a much more important role when the bull riding starts. During this event, the clowns are referred to by the more appropriate title of bull fighter.

"Number one, we're there to save the cowboy, and number two, we're there to make the bull buck better." Loewe said.

They might have made one bull buck too well - K-State bull rider Justin Lynn, freshman in business administration, made it to the final round with a score of 72, but his bull got the best of him in the finals, and he

The Big 8 Room was standing room only Thursday night

Student Senate had a full agenda, and students and speakers crowded into the ovalshaped room at 7 p.m.

Bernard Pitts, K-State Student Union Director, gave an update on the upcoming K-State Student Union enhancement project.

"I want to make one statement, though, first of all. I'm not here to ask for any more money,"

Pitts said, as senators applauded and laughed. Pitts reported that K-State has filed for energy saving bonds, which would save the project money.

We have developed a request for proposals for potential contractors for food service. We've received four responses from national companies interested in our account," Pitts

Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., addressed the crowd and reminisced about his days as a senator and student body president.

Brownback joked that some of the current senators had not been born when he served on Student Senate "I came to K-State and was in Student Senate in 1975, '76, was student body president in '78 and '79. Glad to know some of you were at least alive at that point in time," he said. Brownback went on to encourage senators to continue to tackle the tough issues, some of which are similar to those he deals with in Congress. "I want to encourage you in your involvement. I've seen a lot of people go on and get involved in a number of different things to help out in our society and to help out their country," Brownback said. Vice Provost Elizabeth Unger also addressed Senate Thursday night.

Unger announced changes and additions to the upcoming summer schedule.

The changes include two new six-week sessions in the regular summer school session. One will start immediately after the spring semester and will terminate before July 1. The second session will begin after July 1 and will end the first part of August.

These sessions will have regular courses offered during the two six-week periods.

K-State researchers take bite out of E. Coli

QUICKread ▶ Congratulations goes out to K-State researchers, who have discovered a way to kill 99.9 percent of the E. Coli bacteria found

In the midst of budget battles and fee fights, it's refreshing to hear campus news that makes people remember why they have purple pride.

K-State researchers have perfected a process of steam pasteurization that kills 99.9 percent of E. Coli found in beef.

The beef carcasses are put in a slightly pressurized, enclosed chamber at room temperature and sprayed with steam that blankets and condenses on the entire carcass, causing the surface temperature of the beef to jump to 195 or 200 degrees Fahrenheit almost instantly. This process kills nearly all the pathogens found on beef.

E. Coli is a bacteria found in undercooked meat. The bacteria can cause hemolytic uremic syndrome, which can cause kidney failure in infants and children. The bacteria has been blamed for the deaths of many infants in the past few years.

Students should be excited this kind of research is taking place at K-State and that they can be a part of history. This pasteurization process will affect the health of millions of people world-wide.

Congratulations, researchers. You've made the University proud.

Forgetting what's in our own backyard

In case you haven't heard, the Varsity Theater in Aggieville has become an "art house," a theater that shows predominantly "art" films

You probably have heard, though, because of all the advertising and news stories about the change. Even the Collegian Editorial Board came out in favor of the art house last Tuesday.

The editorial stated that to see international and foreign-language art house films, "students are no longer required to make pilgrimages to Kansas City, Topeka or Lawrence's Liberty

In fact, they didn't have to before. There is a screen in town that shows these kinds of films, and has for many years. It is K-State Student Union Forum Hall, on Thursday and Saturday nights, when showing films in the Kaleidoscope Film the Union Program Council, Operating on funds drawn from ticket sales and student fees, Kaleidoscope's mission is to bring movies that are international or independent of Hollywood, "art films," and other movies the K-State community would otherwise not get to see on the big screen, if at all.

Kaleidoscope has an image problem. If it didn't, people wouldn't feel like they have to trek to Lawrence to see art films.

I know many people who protest that they love good movies and complain there is no place in Manhattan that shows have been a member of Kaleidoscope Films for longer than most people have been in college, so I always question these folks about why they don't go see the Kaleidoscope films.

One response I hear a lot is that the Union's theater has bad sound and projection equipment. Anyone who believes this has not seen a movie in Forum Hall in a couple years. In that time, UPC has used part of its share of the Union expansion fee to buy better equipment.

These days, the equipment in Forum Hall rivals either of the Aggieville theaters, and, in my opinion, blows the Varsity out of the water. After all, the Varsity is a theater where you can see through the screen to the reflection on the Sometimes people complain about what movies Kaleidoscope brings. These people must have a different idea of what an art house should bring than I do.

On Kaleidoscope Films, we do not think that Pulp Fiction is the "artiest" film of 1995. We strive to bring the films that originate outside of Hollywood, films that are truly "art films," in addition to international and foreign-language films.

And, in fact, the Varsity's opening line-up does not include any foreign-language films, while in the last two weeks Kaleidoscope has shown films from Morocco and France.

The Varsity, on the other hand, held over its first "art" film, "Leaving Las Vegas," for two weeks, and that film originated in the dark depths of Hollywood.

Myview

Hamilton

Kaleidoscope brings films by new, independent directors. For example, we brought "Reservoir Dogs" long before "Pulp Fiction" made Tarantino a household name. We brought "El Mariachi" long before the director, Rodriguez, made the atrocious sequel, "Desperado." Kaleidoscope brings older films, too, so people can see them on the big screen. This semester we've Kaleidoscope Films is a committee of already brought "Breakfast at Tiffany's." We try to bring at least one Hitchcool film a year.

Kaleidoscope brings those "obscure Australian comedies" the Collegian editorial refers to. Kaleidoscope brings films that revolutionized cinema. Kaleidoscope brings films with cult followings.

All UPC movies are $1.75, as opposed to the Varsity's $4 admission, and it is easy to save several dollars on concessions at Kaleidoscope films, because the Union doesn't triple the price of snacks and drinks.

And, most importantly, if you are a student who is frustrated because you can't see the films you want, you can join Kaleidoscope Films and help pick the movies for next semester.

Like all the UPC committees, membership is open. Any student can join and take on just as much responsibility and decision-making as that person wants.

I'm not trying to dissuade people from going to the Varsity. I think that far from competing with Kaleidoscope, the Varsity may cause more interest in art films in the community, benefiting both the Varsity and the Union.

Just don't forget there are 16 to 20 art films shown right here at the Union each semester. There are film schedules available at the Union. There is at least one advertisement in the Collegian and at least two posters in the Union each week that proclaim what that week's film is.

Check it out.

FANS WERE PATHETIC

Editor,

I was at the K-State-University of Missouri basketball game Wednesday, and I saw the most pathetic bunch of losers.

I'm not referring to the Tigers' team or their three fans.

Myview

MARY RENEE

Smith

I'm talking about the group of people claiming to be Wildcat fans. I'm not complaining about all fans in general, only those outside of the student sections. The energy and enthusiasm in sections 19 and 20 was unbelievable. Wednesday's game was the most fun I've had at a K-State basketball game since last year's near-upset of KU.

The lack of spirit and participation from the rest of the crowd was just awful. It almost got to the point where I was embarrassed to be cheering for the Wildcats.

Take the people sitting behind the baskets, for instance. During the opposition's free throw attempts, it is their assumed job to jump around, wave their arms and make total fools of themselves trying to distract the shooter. Why else would any sane person want those end zone seats,

The only movement I noticed the entire evening, other than the band bouncing around, was a couple of little kids dancing in the aisle and the Pizza Hut rent-a-ball boy waving his

I guess I just don't realize what a shame it would be for them to spill their drinks while trying to clap or doing anything most fans do during an exciting game. The worst part of the whole evening came with just more than one minute to go. We had just pushed the lead to five after a couple of turnovers, and Swartzendruber was at the line. All of a sudden, half of these people got up and left.

These were probably the same people who left when the University of Colorado game was tied with two minutes left in regulation. This was the part of the game when the team most needed the crowd's support.

Coach Asbury and the team have finally put together a great basketball game, with decent shooting, smothering defense, free throws, keeping the half-time lead without choking and making pointless fouls and turnovers in crunch time. But these people turned their backs and walked out. Whether it was to beat the rush to Taco Bell or to catch the end of "48 Hours," nothing was worth leaving the team behind the way they did.

If our team is ever going to have a decent chance of competing for the Big 12 title and eventually returning to the NCAA Tournament, this kind of betrayal from the people in the stands can't be tolerated.

But this time the results were not the same for K-State. Despite May's efforts, the Wildcats were defeated by No. 5 Kansas, 77-66, at Bramlage Coliseum.

"All year I've been telling Ayome and Aaron to start taking more shots. I was proud of Ayome's performance today," K-State point guard Elliot Hatcher said.

May said the earlier meeting between the two teams could have contributed to his success Saturday.

"Maybe they looked at the first game and saw that I didn't play much and that I didn't play very well," May said. "I think because of that, they were laying off me some today,"

In that earlier meeting at Allen Fieldhouse, May was 1-of-3 from the field, scoring two points and grabbing three rebounds

Saturday was a different story for May. Not only did May pace the team - fact, May had not hit the double-figwith 20 points, but he also led the team in rebounds (six) and steals

At the 6:20 mark of the second half, May brought the Cats back to within five with two free throws. Then at the 6:02 mark, May showed off his defensive skills, stealing a pass from Kansas guard Jarod Haase. May then took it the length of the court and pulled up for a 16-foot jump shot. That basket got the crowd roaring, as it pulled the Cats within three, 62-59.

"I try to play hard every night at both the offensive and defensive end," May said. "I thought that when we got it down to three, we would come out with a victory. But every time we got close, it seemed like either Vaughn would hit a three, or we would turn the ball over."

Unlucky number 13 held true to form as K-State lost its 13th-straight home game to Kansas Saturday,

During the last Big 8 conference home game, fans packed Bramlage Coliseum with a sold-out crowd only to see the Cats lose on Senior Day.

For Senior Day, the Cats started four seniors in Tyrone Davis, Elliot Hatcher, George Hill and Brian Gavin, along with sophomore Mark Young.

The only winning point for the Cats in the game came when the tip was stolen away by Hill at the beginning whistle. After that, the Jayhawks jumped out to a 9-0 lead and led the rest of the game.

K-State pulled to within two at the 11:18 mark of the first half after a 11-4 run brought the score to 13-11. Yet that would be the closest the Cats could come to taking the lead.

At 15:51 left in the game, the Cats came to within five after a Tyrone Davis bucket made the score 45-40. Kansas then answered with a dunk from forward Raef LaFrentz on a back door play that left K-State wondering what happened.

The Cats made one final run in a gallant effort but could pull only to within three. At 5:43 remaining in the game and the score 62-59 after five-straight K-State points, Kansas' Jacque Vaughn hit a three, which tightened the clamps down on the Cats' hopes for a comeback.

Kansas coach Roy Williams said his 1995-96 Big 8 Championship team showed poise in the game.

"The crowd got into the game, and that always helps the home team," Williams said. "You can't let the crowd shake you, and I thought we handled it pretty good. We just stayed focused on what we had to do to win and on what's going to help our team the most."

Whenever K-State would get within striking distance, either the Hawks' Vaughn or LaFrentz would step up big and score. Vaughn, Scott Pollard and LaFrentz finished with 20, 16 and 13 points respec-

K-State was led in scoring by Hatcher and Ayome May, who had 20 points each. For May, it was a career game in scoring, besting an 18-point effort against Marshall earlier this season.

Even with May's career game, it wasn't enough. They're real hard to defend because their post men are so big," May said. "They just throw the ball up there and expect them to go get it. They're the hardest team I've ever had to defend because when they take out one of their big post men, they just bring another one in the same size, and they really don't lose any-

K-State coach Tom Asbury was disgusted after the loss and said playing close wasn't good enough.

"I take zero consolation in playing close. I don't take moral victories," Asbury said. "Jacque Vaughn hit some huge shots for them. They had great poise. We had to rely too much on our freshmen, and that's a dangerous thing to do. We shoot 35 percent, and you're not going to win many games doing that. We played very, very hard, but we didn't play well."

Freshman forward Shawn Rhodes said Kansas won because of its depth, and the play of K-State's freshman class, who scored 25 points in the game, may have been a bright spot in the game.

"You got to give them a lot of credit," Rhodes said. They made the plays. Every time we cut the lead down to four or five, they made a big play. I felt we played hard enough to win. We just made poor decisions. Give them credit. Every time we cut it down, they stepped up with a big play.

"I think the play of our freshmen play might be a good sign for the future," he said. "Tyrone and Elliot didn't have as good of a game they would have liked to had, but you got to give Kansas' reserves credit."

Both Hatcher and Davis said the loss against Kansas wasn't the way they wanted to end their careers at Bramlage.

"I just went out and treated this like any other game," Hatcher said. "I'm just not the type of person to get emotional, this being my last home game against Kansas. We wanted to win, but it didn't hap-

"It's sad that it's the last for me in Bramlage, and I'm also sad that we couldn't pull it off against Kansas," Davis said. "Now we got to keep to our heads and come back and try to win our last two games."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Streaky, streakier, streakiest.

Just about everything that had been happening going into the Big 8's next-to-last weekend kept happening. The Kansas Jayhawks keep winning Big 8 titles. Kansas keeps beating K-State on Oklahoma State keeps beating Colorado everywhere. Oklahoma keeps beating Nebraska in overtime.

But leave it to Norm Stewart's unpredictable Missouri to swim against the tide.

If Julian Winfield had made that final layup, Missouri might have kept beating Iowa State.

But he didn't, so No. 22 Iowa State escaped Columbia with a 78-74 victory that snapped a 10-game losing streak to the Tigers. It also strengthened the Cyclones' NCAA standing, but did nothing to keep them within shouting distance of No. 5 Kansas in the final Big 8 race.

The Jayhawks (23-2 overall, 11-1 Big 8) took care of business with a 77-66 victory at K-State that gave them their fifth Big 8 championship in the conference's last six years.

Kansas tied Oklahoma State for the 1990-91 title.

"That feels good," said Kansas point guard Jacque Vaughn, who hit four of five three-pointers and finished with 20 points.

"To establish a dominance in the league and maintain our presence in the upper echelon in the league really feels good." K-State (15-9, 6-6) has now lost at home to Kansas 13-straight times, going all the way back to 1983. As coach at Pepperdine and K-State, Tom Asbury is 0-8 against the Jayhawks. "This isn't very complicated," Asbury said. "I'm not very happy."

Oklahoma State (15-9, 5-7) continued its recent surge and rang up a ninth-straight victory over Colorado when Adrian Peterson hit a jump shot at the buzzer for a 66-64 victory in Boulder.

In Lincoln Sunday, Oklahoma (16-10, 7-5) made it a 4-0 weekend sweep for road teams with an 80-76 victory over troubled Nebraska (15-12, 3-9). It was the Sooners' second straight overtime victory over the Huskers.

In Columbia, Iowa State's Dedric Willoughby had 25 points and one answered prayer.

Like everybody else, he was almost afraid to look as Winfield, who already had a career-high 25 points, went for the layup that would have tied the game with about five seconds left. But the ball rolled out.

Willoughby said, "I was praying on that one. Please come out,"

Winfield said, "It's just ironic. I spend my whole career shooting layups and dunking all the time. And I come out today and hit jump shots and miss the layups."

Iowa State (19-7, 8-4) swept Missouri for the first time since 1978, won for the first time in Columbia since 1985 and handed the Tigers (16-11, 6-6) their first loss in 14 home games.

"It's a long time, huh?" Willoughby said.

"Everyone said we weren't going to have a good team, but we held in there and played together. The guys that weren't supposed to do anything, finish in last place, won here."

At Boulder Saturday, Mack Tuck tied the score 64-64 with 30 seconds

After a time out, Oklahoma State in-bounded the ball to Andre Owens, who dished off to Peterson, who hit a jumper just inside the free-throw line. Jason Skaer led Oklahoma State (15-9, 5-7) with 16 points.

Martice Moore scored 23, and Tuck had 21 for Colorado, combining to score 44 of Colorado's 64 points.

Colorado lost the game at the freethrow line, making just nine of 21, including six of 15 in the second half.

Cats' indoor track season ends with 3rd-place finish in finals

When it comes to the Big 8 indoor track championships, it's usually a race for second place behind the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

This year was no different. But while the host Huskers cruised to wins on the women's and men's sides. K-State held its own, especially on the women's side.

The Wildcats finished third on the women's side with a score of 97 points, 24.5 points ahead of fourth-place Kansas. Nebraska won the women's overall title with 197 points, 43 points ahead of second-place Colorado, which finished with 154 points.

The men couldn't duplicate the women's success, however, placing sixth with 62 points, nine points behind fifth-place Kansas. The Huskers cruised to the team title, finishing with 192 points, 55 points ahead of second-place Oklahoma.

The lone individual win for the Cats came in the women's high jump, where Wanita Dykstra captured the event with a height of 5 feet, 11 1/4 inches.

Three K-Staters picked up NCAA provisional qualifying times in the meet, including Renetta Seiler in the women's 20-pound weight throw (54 feet, 7 1/2 inches, sixth), Susan Seymour in the women's 55-meter dash (6.96 seconds, third), and Scott Galas in the men's 800-meter run (1:50.96,

Other K-State top-five finishes on the women's side came from Karissa Stewart (fourth in 55-meter dash, 7.00 seconds), Danielle Avery (fifth in triple jump, 38 feet, 4 1/4 inches), Emily Diederich (third in 800-meter run, 2:12.33), Belinda Hope (second in 400-meter dash, 55.53 seconds), Irma Betancourt (second in 1000-meter run, 2:52.02), Cristy Swartz (fifth in 1000-meter run, 2:56.62), and the 4x400 meter relay team (third, 3:52.06).

Top-five finishes on the men's side came from Jeff Martin (third in 600-yard run, 1:10.90), Chris May (second in 1000-meter run, 2:28.33), David Dominguez (fourth in 1000-meter run, 2:29.05), Ryan Johnson (fourth in 800-meter run, 1:52.75), and the 4x400 meter relay team (fifth, 3:19.95).

'Hobbit' full of fluid movement, playful animation

Last night's production of "The Hobbit" in McCain Auditorium was a spectacular show — no strings

A group of five extremely talented, black-clothed puppeteers created the motion for the performance. Behind each vividly colored puppet was either one or two puppeteers animating the mystical creature by use of skillfully hidden rods and no strings.

The puppeteers were beautiful in their movements. Graceful and fluid, yet virtually unnoticeable, they moved enormous creatures across the wide, black stage. The size of these creatures was not intentional though. When the puppets were crafted, a mistake was Bilbo, one of the small creatures and a respected hobbit, joins a crusade to help reclaim a treasure from a mighty dragon which possesses beautiful jewels.

Music scene suffers from lack of all-ages venue

Phil Kellum

Manhattan should have a club that doesn't check IDs.

All-ages clubs are set up to give those under the age of 21 a place where they can go and hear live music. Many cities in America with thriving music scenes have at least one. The Daily Grind in Kansas City, Mo., is the closest full-time all-ages club to Manhattan. The Bottleneck in Lawrence has occasional all-ages shows, but not often.

The Daily Grind attracts not only the underage patrons but some of those who are old enough to enter bars. A typical concert attracts those from under 12 to those over 21.

"It is everything to the local scene. This is pretty much what the scene is all about. If it wasn't for this club, probably there wouldn't be really a scene, so to speak," Greg Shields, owner of the Daily Grind, said.

"What we're trying to do is bring live music down that all ages can come and see. That has just not been possible in Kansas City, it .cems like." Brandon Brown, 17-year-old Kearney, Mo., resident and editor of Dee Dee's Kids Fanzine, said, "To not provide young people with a place to go see shows is a crime. There should always be an alcohol-free venue to exert their energy - the energy that is mostly responsible for getting punk, hardcore and alternative off its feet to the stellar proportions it has reached now.'

The Daily Grind is the third in recent attempts to establish an all-ages venue in Kansas City. The Rhumba Box was opened in 1992 and was shut down by the city for various code violations. The 454 was the next to try to open, and the city closed it before it really opened for code violations.

"They always try to open up, and they always get shut down for one reason or another. By being a coffeehouse, we seem to be able to stay open and keep something rolling that isn't going in Kansas City," Shields said.

After acquiring the space in which to open the club, Shields said the only real expenses are doing sound, longdistance phone calls, mailings, advertising and paying the bands.

Shields said he gets anywhere from 20 to 50 calls a day from various bands, booking agents and record labels seeking shows.

Manhattan's last venture into the all-ages venue realm was the Warehouse, which was only open for a bands enjoy playing all-ages clubs few months in 1993 and 1994 and was located on Houston Street. The Warehouse attracted such diverse bands as the Jesus Lizard, Morphine, Uncle Tupelo, Flaming Lips, Jawbox and Skankin' Pickle.

Truck Stop Love drummer Eric Melin said those bands never would have come to Manhattan if it wasn't for The Warehouse.

Manhattan resident and Ever Since My Accident bassist Russell Behrends said, "It brought an awareness of music to the surrounding area. It made the scene bigger for a short time."

Promotion is key to the success of an all-ages club. Behrends said in order for a club to survive, it needs to flier heavily and promote heavily in all Behrends said the venue would have to be smaller in size, similar to Berlin, in order to fill it most of the time for shows.

The overwhelming opinion is more than bars

Behrends said, "It's better because the older people, they just stand there. - they're just The kids don't care silly. It's more of a reaction."

Shields said, "That's who the bands want to play to. They want to play to the all-ages. The bar scene just doesn't seem to be happening, I guess. By playing all-ages, they're able to reach a really important part of their market that they otherwise wouldn't be able Melin said the former Berlin location would be ideal for an all-ages club, but it has been occupied by Wildcat Waterbeds.

Melin said he doesn't think Manhattan could support national bands playing every week.

"The Warehouse was a good example of how you can't have shows all the time, because it made money once a month on a big show. Then it lost money consistently the next three weeks and then had another big show and made money again. It wasn't enough to keep it going," he said. One option to a full-time all-ages venue would be all-ages nights at local

"Instead of opening up an all-ages club, I think it might be easier to use somebody else once a month or something like that. Bring in a band, get a promoter like (Lawrence promoter Jeff) Fortier or somebody like that who's got connections, and have them do all-ages shows once a month," Melin said.

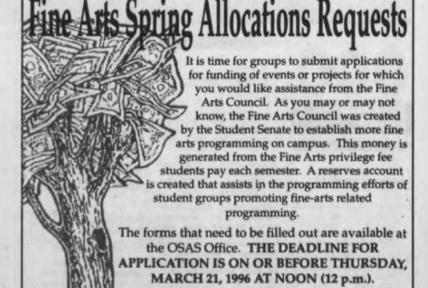

"That seems like a better idea to me. Then if it happens, you can do it more frequently, but I think you have to start out slow. The Warehouse started out big and quick, and that's why it died," he said.

"It is up to the youth to perpetuate the scene and keep it aflame, and an all-ages venue would definitely help that flame stay lit," Brown said.

Fire forces evacuation of Auburn residents

Associated Press

AUBURN - A grass fire in northeast Kansas burned about 36 square miles of land and forced a partial evacuation of the small town of Auburn Saturday before being brought under control, while in southern Kansas, firefighters struggled to control a fire that had burned thousands of acres.

Auburn assistant fire chief John Washburn said about 150 firefighters stopped the fire about a half-mile from town. One home near Auburn was damaged, and two firefighters were hospitalized for smoke inhalation. A fire truck was also burned.

Washburn had ordered the west side of town evacuated late Saturday afternoon. Residents were able to return Saturday night.

He said officials did not know how the fire started. It began in Osage County, then spread into Shawnee County, southwest of Topeka. Washburn said the fire was about nine miles long and four miles wide Saturday afternoon as it approached Auburn, a town of about 1,000 people about 15 miles from the state capital of Topeka.

Conditions were dry, and winds were gusty Saturday evening, but most residents said it wasn't very smoky, even as the town was being evacuated. Washburn said firefighters would spend the night watching for any flareups.

"We're just going to keep sending trucks out and try to keep any spot fires under control," he said.

The land is mostly agricultural, but there are several homes in the area. Washburn said one home in Auburn had sustained some damage, but none were destroyed, and no deaths were reported.

Thirteen fire departments fought the blaze. Washburn said the fire was eventually stopped north of a watershed lake in Auburn with six or seven fire trucks and about 40 firefighters

The fire started Thursday morning near Camp Houston, Okla., a few dozen miles south of the Kansas-Oklahoma border.

Connie Holtom, an office deputy at the Woods County Sheriff's Department in Oklahoma, said the fire began when a utility vehicle ignited dry grass Thursday after-

DALLAS - Grass fires that had already consumed thousands of acres of parched land in Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma kept popping up Saturday, needing only a spark from a passing train or an errantly tossed cigarette butt to ignite them.

Grass, trees and shrubs, crackling dry from lack of moisture, are consumed in seconds by the flames. The ensuing fires are pushed by gusty winds and roar along at speeds of 40 mph or more across vast stretches of open prairie.

At least three fires had sprung back to life Saturday in Medicine Lodge, about 25 miles from the state line. "It's nothing but miles and miles of grassland and ravines," volunteer firefighter Richard Becker said.

"I've never seen them this fast," said firefighter Pat Harbold, who spent much of this past week battling a 16,500-acre fire near Poolville, Texas.

Similar fires throughout Oklahoma de- and crews to help out.

stroyed 26 homes, injured at least 12 firefighters and left one volunteer firefighter dead of cardiac arrest near Okemah, about 70 miles east of Oklahoma City.

One of the largest fires charred tens of thousands of acres from Oklahoma's rural Woods County across the state line into Kansas, burning some barns and outbuildings in its path as it raced down canyons and across dry rangeland. The fire in Poolville, 35 miles west of Fort Worth, injured more than 50 people and destroyed more than 150 homes and other buildings.

Firefighters chase the flames in small, four-wheel drive "bush trucks" equipped with 500-gallon water tanks.

"You think you have it out and you look 100 yards past you and there's another one started," Harbold said. "I've never seen them this fast.'

FARM BILL

Farmers unite in protest

Farmers nationwide meet in Wichita to rally against U.S. Farm Bill

J. Scott Bucholz

Farmers from as far away as North Dakota and Wisconsin rallied in Wichita Friday to protest the Farm Bill passed by the U.S. Senate Feb. 7.

The farmers, who represented 15 states, said they wanted to draw attention to the deficiencies of the Farm Bill and to urge Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman to recommend a veto of the bill by President Bill Clinton. Glickman did not attend the rally.

This is the first forum to discuss the aspects and the ramifications of the proposed farm bill, Leland Swenson, president of the National Farmers Union, said.

"This is not an anti-Farm Bill rally but a rally for an open forum with Congress to debate the proposed farm bill," Swenson said.

Willie Nelson, country singer and Farm Aid supporter, showed up in support of the rally.

"I am pleased that so many farmers have come together to send a clear message to President Clinton that he should veto any farm bill legislation that will decrease family farm income," he

Nelson said he is concerned because the Senate bill would do the opposite of what farmers are calling for.

"Instead of giving farmers the opportunity to earn a decent living from the land, this bill calls for a declining set of fixed payments to farmers, whether or not they farm," Nelson said.

The bill, as it is now, allows payments to farmers based on their previous years' benefits without any mechanism to balance commodity supplies - an important focus of previous farm bills. Also, the bill reduces farm program loan rates and eventually phases out the programs altogether, provisions opponents said will limit participation, kill existing conservation incentives and destabilize the rural economy

"The bill passed by the Senate would harm family farmers by severely weakening the rural safety net and denying farmers the chance to earn an adequate income from their farm operations," Nelson said. Swenson said this farm bill needs improvements. "If these improvements do not occur, and we put this on your shoulders, Mr. Secretary," he said. "If Congress does not heed the concerns of the rural farmers, we want you to urge the President to veto the Farmers object to the Senate bill's decoupling of farm program benefits from production, Swenson

The bill is a version of "Freedom-to-Farm Act" that was introduced earlier this year by U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan, who is chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

Under Roberts' bill, farmers who grow commodities such as wheat, milo and corn would be guaranteed a payment, which would decline over the seven-year life of the bill.

Yet farmers would be allowed to plant almost any crop - or possibly no crop at all - and their payments would not be tied to a targeted market price, as they are under the current farm program.

Nelson said if this bill is signed into law, thousands of hard-working families will be forced off their farms, and young people who want to get started in farming would be denied that opportunity.

Tom Giessel, Larned farmer, said farmers do not want this kind of decoupled welfare payment.

"They want a farm bill that will allow them to gain their income from the market and in that way stimulates the rural economy," he

INTERNATIONAL FORUM

Amnesty speaker notes conflicts existing among Nigerian people

Nigerians have been held hostage by their fellow countrymen for almost four decades and are now crying out for democracy

Anthony Ochiabutor, representative of Nigerians for Democracy, spoke to students and Manhattan residents about the political problems that plague Nigeria.

"Nigeria is held hostage today by a few Nigerians. Unless Nigerians and the international community come to the rescue of Nigerians today, there will not be a Nigeria for future Nigerians," Ochiabutor said.

Ochiabutor said he does not speak of his country as someone from the United States might speak about their country, because some of his fellow countrymen have decided to keep Nigeria hostage.

"Nigerians need to come to terms with the difficult truth that the key losers in this struggle will be the Nigerians and future Nigerians," Ochiabutor said.

With more than 120 million people, Nigeria is the most populous country in the African continent.

"It is blessed with vast natural resources, but greed and corruption have overtaken it," Ochiabutor said.

Northern Nigeria is primarily occupied by the Hausa tribe, the west predominately by the Yoruba tribe and the east by the Ibo tribe.

"Among these three there are hundreds of ethnic groups within these tribes. For Nigeria to remain a united country these tribalistic problems must be addressed," Ochiabutor said.

Ochiabutor cited not only the problems of the diversified ethnic groups, but also the fact that since becoming an independent nation only one head of state has been elected by the people of Nigeria.

Despite presidential elections held in June 1993, President Babangida annulled the results, alleging that the candidates had been buying votes.

Declaring that a new election would be in the future, President Babangida installed his own civilian leader, Ernest Shonekan, who was replaced in November by General Sani Abacha.

"Today General Abacha has become so indifferent to wrong and right that he does mind exposing his own destructiveness to the world," Ochiabutor said.

Ochiabutor said Nigeria has been plagued by political and civil unrest since its independence, thus causing the current problems in Nigeria.

"History has it that no county has prospered during any political or civil unrest. How then can Nigeria prosper amidst great civil unrest and political

"Nigeria was once seen by the international community as the most stable, progressive, competent democratic developers of the African countries. But today Nigerians yearn for democracy and justice," Ochiabutor

He asked how the west, especially the United States and Britain, come to accept such a government as the status

"How long will it take the U.S. to realize that Nigeria's civil unrest today will become the problem of western nations tomorrow?" Ochiabutor said.

Ochaibutor also spoke of the problems created from the environmental protests that led to the execution of Nigerian activist Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight others.

"Ken Saro-Wiwa is a well-known environmental activist who protested the abuses of the land and ecology," said David Schmidt, professor in computer and information sciences.

Schmidt and other members of the Manhattan Amnesty International chapter began a campaign to raise awareness of the deteriorating human rights conditions in Kenya and Nigeria.

"Human rights is a global issue we all need to maintain and protect," Schmidt said.

student directory," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc.,

Ben Clouse, Finance Committee chair for the Board of Student Publications, said many factors have affected the budget of Student Publications Inc., including a sharp increase in the cost of newsprint, which has risen 65 percent over the past two years. The increase in the cost of newsprint has forced the Wichita Eagle to stop deliveries to Manhattan, Johnson said.

Aaron Otto, chairman of the board, said measures have been taken to combat costs, "We've cut the press run, cut training of staff, cut copies, cut travel. We've raised every price we can. We've raised the price of the ads, the Campus Directory - and the price of the Royal Purple is going up next year," he said.

Otto said the price of the Royal Purple will be raised from $21 to $24 next school year. Each copy of the Royal Purple costs $43.77 to produce but can be bought for $21.

"Students are paying half-price," Mark Tomb, privilege committee chairman, said. "The other half is being paid by student fee dollars."

"I think people like the Royal Purple, and people would be willing to pay more for it," he said. Tomb said Student Publications

Inc. needs to decide where to make up the costs. "There's still going to be some need for cost cutting, but I think the decision made tonight doesn't kill the Royal Purple, and it doesn't kill the Collegian," he said. Linda Puntney, assistant director of Student Publications Inc. and adviser to the Royal Purple, said the fee is important to keep costs of the Royal Purple down both to purchase and for organizations to be included. She said before a fee at the University of Arkansas was implemented for its yearbook, organizations paid between $250 and $500 to be included in it. After the introduction of the fee, organizations were included for free.

"It is because of that fee that we don't have to tell organizations that it will cost $500 to have their picture in it," Puntney said.

"If you guys cut the fee, I can tell you we are going to be in trouble," Puntney said. "I think it's important that you people consider the decisions you make now will affect people 20, 30 even 50 years from now," she said.

Otto said to make up for the increased cost, Student Publications Inc. will have to look at cutting the Collegian's circulation further and reducing the number of pages in each issue, both of which affects advertising dollars that can be brought in.

"When you have less papers, it not only hurts the students. It hurts our bottom line in advertising dollars," Otto said.

Otto said if there is no fee increase, next year some students might not be able to find newspapers. Student Senate will have first readings of the Student Publications Inc. fee at Thursday's meeting. A twothirds majority vote is required to raise or lower the current fee. A simple majority is required to keep it the

The E. coli bacteria can be found in undercooked meat.

This was reported to the director of eligibility at the NCAA, who restored the athletes' eligibility at the request of the institution.

Fire burns 640 acres of Riley County

■ 39 percent of Konza Prairie burned in weekend fires

J. Scot Bucholz and Sarah Lunday

Small, smoldering fires burned Monday in the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area after a raging wild fire swept across the prairie

Doug Messer, assistant fire chief for Manhattan and Riley County Rural Fire Department, said the fires are no longer a threat, but if they picked up, crews would be called immediately.

Thirty-nine percent of the Konza

Prairie and 640 acres of open prairie in Riley County burned, Messer said.

Capt. Allen Raynor, with the Riley County Police Department, said it is speculation that a cigarette started the fire. "So this bit is wild speculation," Raynor said.

Raynor said people speculated about the cigarette because no equipment or people were working in the area of the fire's origin.

"We have no idea how the fire started," Messer said. "We have not found a source and may not because it is that close to the highway."

Riley County Police are not investigating the cause of the fire, Raynor

House approves state university admissions bill

Associated Press

TOPEKA - After trying 10 times in as many years, the Kansas Legislature might pass a measure to require its high school students to meet minimum standards before gaining admission into its six public universities.

The House on Monday tentatively approved, 66-56, a bill that would have Kansas join the rest of the nation in requiring its high school graduates to complete certain courses, obtain a minimum grade point average or score high enough on college entrance exams to get into the public universities.

Kansas is the only state that doesn't require graduates of its own high schools to meet minimum

The House will take final action on the bill Tuesday. If it passes, the Senate will take up the

Through the years, getting representatives to vote in favor of admission standards has proved a bigger hurdle than getting senators to support them.

"It's just not Kansas. I think it's elitism," said Rep. Doug Mays, R-Topeka, who voted against the Mays and others argued in nearly four hours of debate that setting standards would create barriers, especially for poor students, to public universities. "The last thing we need are more barriers to opportunity, more barriers to education in this state," said Rep. Jim Garner, D-Coffeyville. But the bill's sponsor, Rep. Ralph Tanner, R-Baldwin, former president of the private Baker University, said allowing all high school graduates into the universities sets many up for failure. If the bill passes, he said, the dropout rate among university freshmen could decrease, and the state may have to spend less on remedial education to bring freshmen up to the college-level speed. "Perhaps a greater cost is the emotional cost that comes to mother and father and even the student, the emotional investment lost, when a kid fails,"

LOCAL RESTAURANT CLOSES; EMPLOYEES TAKEN ABACK

Old Chicago Bar and Grill shut its doors Sunday, surprising both employees and patrons.

RAC Enterprises, the landlord corporation for the restaurant, said it is trying to get a new lease in the near future, S.M. Samarrai, RAC Enterprises Executive Director, said.

An associate of Old Chicago, who wished not to be identified, said, "At this point, to my knowledge, it is closed for approximately a couple of weeks until a buyer is found.

Samarrai said RMG Inc., the owner of the restaurant, took control of the restaurant last April. He said RMG has lost a lot of money and finally decided to close the restaurant.

Samarrai said the staff would probably be rehired.

"We want to be fair with them. They are going to be paid," he said.

Students, children learn from each other

Art is a reflection of one's culture, but it can also be used to teach multiculturalism in the classroom. Tuesday, 40-50 K-State students from Lynda Andrus' Art for Elementary Students class met with students at Riley County Grade School to help broaden their understanding of other cultures. "We made banners, and we got paint all over ourselves," Dylan Sultzer, fourth grader, said. "But my mom won't mind

,because it washes out. In 45-minute intervals, students ranging from kindergarten to eighth grade entered the gymnasium to paint banners with the K-State students. Becky Schwartz, junior in elementary education, said she was enjoying the day. "I love working with the kids they're so full of energy," Schwartz said. "It's fun to work with them in a different way such as with art."

John Donovan, junior in secondary art education, said his day began with kind of a rocky start.

"First thing this morning, I spilled water on some little fourth grader's project," Donovan said. "I felt bad, but he was really cheerful. He just got up and moved to a different spot."

Donovan said he believes art is an important aspect in the classroom.

"Art is necessary for a whole curriculum. It is an expression of ideas and creativity," Donovan said. "It's also a break in the day from other subjects, too."

In preparation for the day, the K-State students had painted banners representing cultures such as Native Americans and ancient Egypt, which were displayed as examples for the elementary students to follow.

Julie Doyen, fifth-grade teacher, said her students used a symmetrical drawing of their names for their projects. Then a border was drawn around the name, and the miniature banner was painted.

"Each child's name represents a child hurt by the war in Bosnia," Doyen said. "The border represents fighting over the borders in that area."

Nicole Keller, fifth grader, said her class has been learning about the suffering in Bosnia.

"We learned that they are going through a hard time, and they don't have a lot of things," Keller said.

Keller said she liked meeting the K-State students. "It's fun to meet people who want to be teachers and will teach someday," she said. See PAINT Page 10

▶ CLINTON TO PUNISH CUBA FOR DESTRUCTION OF 2 U.S. PLANES

WASHINGTON (AP) -President Clinton moved to punish Fidel Castro Monday by stepping up economic sanctions on Cuba as the "price for outrageous behavior," the destruction by Cuban MiGs of two unarmed U.S. aircraft.

The broad series of economic, diplomatic and political steps outlined Monday were intended to isolate Castro's government further and inoculate Clinton against jibes from Republican rivals.

The president approved measures targeting Cuban aviation, including restrictions on U.S. air travel to Cuba, a senior administration official said.

The president also planned to demand reparations from Cuba for survivors of the victims. The two Cessnas carried four Cuban Americans who worked with a Miami-based, anti-Castro exile organization, and all remain unaccounted for. The official said Clinton was expected to withdraw his objections to a bill in Congress that would punish companies doing business with

The radio crackled to

"Nine-six?" the voice said over the radio. It was 6 p.m., and Rusty Hall would be on the road for another 12 hours. However, he would not even make it outside the Manhattan area.

Hall would spend the entire night driving around Manhattan in a sunshine yellow sedan, searching for those who rely on taxi cabs for transportation.

"Check, nine-six," Hall, cab driver,

"I need you at Blockbuster Video," the dispatcher said.

"Check - the one up there by Taco Bell?" Hall asked.

although Hall said Friday and Saturday nights are the worst, it could be a busy one.

He said it was payday at Fort Riley, and the bars were going to be busy. Picking up people from the bars is a large part of Hall's job - and it isn't always easy.

"I have gotten a hold of some different drunks as I was getting done that were just crazy," Hall said. "The worst I ever had was some guy getting

When things do slow down, Hall finds time for a nap.

"Some mornings about 2:30, it goes absolutely dry, and there is no place to check out," Hall said. "So I just go down to Dillons parking lot and get everything finished up and take a nap."

If he has time to catch a nap, Hall said he makes sure to tell the dispatcher where he is and also lets the security guard at Dillons know he's catching a few winks.

"I know the security guards down there," Hall said. "One of them patrols outside and I'll talk to him for a while and let him know I am going to take a nap. That way I don't have to worry about getting bonked on the head."

Qualified admissions an idea that's past due

QUICKread

► Students should support a bill in the Kansas Legislature which would establish qualified admissions in regents universities.

Where education is concerned, Kansas is in the middle ages.

Every state except Kansas requires its high school graduates to fulfill admissions requirements to be accept-ed at their state schools.

Monday night, the Kansas House of Representatives tentatively approved a qualified admissions bill.

We say it's about time. For the past 10 years, Kansas representatives and senators such as the bill's sponsor, Rep. Ralph Tanner, R-Baldwin, have been trying to set qualifications. For those same 10 years, bills such as this one have failed.

The House will take final action on the bill today, and if it passes, the Senate will vote on it.

According to the the bill, Kansas high school graduates would have to meet one of three requirements to enter regents schools: have a composite of 21 on the ACT, rank in the top one-third of their graduating class or have a 2.0 GPA out of high school.

This is not unreasonable. High school graduates are all too often unprepared for K-State.

K-State students should support the bill. One day, those same high schools that graduated us will be grad-uating our children. Would we want our children to receive a sub-par education because there are no standards to meet? The education system must be forced to provide a quality education for every student.

K-State's administrators should support the measure. Although it might result in decreasing enrollment, the real issue at hand is education. What is more important - profit or

INTERNET SHOULD BE AVAILABLE FOR COURSES

I didn't get to read the Collegian's editorial on the SLIP connection fee, but from the letters to the Collegian Feb. 20, it appears at least one instructor is requiring the use of the Internet in course work. The Internet is another tool among many tools that are available for academic learning. If faculty and students are expected or required to make use of it, free access should be provided. It is no different than using the library or computer services.

There are many students who commute long distances, and there are disabled persons who may not be able to come to campus in the evenings to obtain access to Internet. On the other hand, if congestion in the evening is the problem, access time should be limited to a certain number of hours per semester. This should take care of those surfers who get carried away or get caught in the web for too long. Not too long ago, we all had computing center accounts with limited CPU time. The same should work for the SLIP connection.

COLUMNIST GENERALIZES INSTEAD OF USING FACTS

I think sophomore physics major Lach Franquemont has had too many apples fall on his head while testing the law of

In his column linking poverty and crime, he started with facts about incarceration rates among western industrialized countries. Lach should have stopped there, but since he had a few more hundred words to write, he strayed to a point of making assumptions based on common sense with implications of fact.

Call me old-fashioned, but I tend to rely a little more on empirical evidence. A lot of people still believe in Santa Claus and the Easter Bunny, but I do not want to be the one to tell them otherwise.

More cops, more prisons and longer sentences do not reduce the crime rate or affect recidivism. Prisons and longer sentences only temporarily incapacitate. Whether they deter is another discussion.

Franquemont chooses to use teenage murder as the basis of his definitive statement that there is a causal link between poverty and crime. There are some things that immediately come to mind: Crime includes a larger array of offenses besides murder; everybody in the United States has committed some traffic, misdemeanor or felony crime, but not everyone has been caught; white-collar and corporate crime causes more financial loss, injury and death than all street crime combined; if poverty causes crime, how would Lach explain the convictions of Pete Rose, Ted Bundy, Michael Miliken and James Colson? Does poverty explain the pending murder charges against DuPont?

Franquemont uses coincidence to imply causation. Since six out of seven youth arrested for violent crimes in Los Angeles are African American or Hispanic, and that is the same proportion of African Americans and Hispanics living in poverty, then poverty among these groups causes crime. But there are more poor whites in the United States than any

Let me see if I have grasped this by using another example. Since only onethird of the convicted felons go to prison, and that one-third ate Spam as children, then common sense would dictate that Spam causes one to be incarcerated. Maybe Lach is onto something here, and perhaps he should change his major to criminology.

There is evidence the criminal justice system discriminates in who is arrested and convicted, but that is a quantum leap from explaining who commits crime. I will let Lach explain his stereotypical beliefs to the African American, Hispanic and the poor who do not com-

I am really looking forward to the musical presentation by the bison roaming the range out at Konza Prairie. In your article on page 3 of the Feb. 22 Collegian, it states, "Renovation of the house is underway, and we plan to get started on the bison chorale this summer." Perhaps Sunset Zoo could be contacted to provide various animal members to form an orchestra to accompany the bison chorale.

READER GIVES ALTERNATIVE FACTS ABOUT CONDOM USE

I couldn't help but notice that along with St. Valentine's Day, Feb. 14 is National Condom Day according to the A.S.H.A. "Condom-grams" were sold in the Union. "What a great idea," some said. Me? I wonder how many unwanted pregnancies began that night. How many people contracted a sexually-transmitted disease Wednesday night believing they were safe using a condom?

While I appreciate efforts to curb the epidemic of sexually-transmitted diseases, I cannot understand why groups such as S.H.A.P.E. focus on these unreliable sheets of latex. Why are we taught that condoms are a way to be safe? At an institution of higher learning, we must concern ourselves with the facts.

Here are some facts about condoms that many people do not know. These facts come from a pamphlet titled "Teaching your kids to say no to sex," by Dr. James Dobson. Some of the information was also gathered through interviews with Dr. Donald Philgreen of

An uncompromised condom is one which has not been stored below 32 degrees Fahrenheit or above 90 degrees Fahrenheit. It has not been under pres sure and is less than one year old. (Note that this already rules out most condoms you will ever actually see - those shipped overland by trucks in the summer and winter, those stacked under other shipping crates and without a doubt the one you're sitting on in your wallet.)

This ideal uncompromised condom is checked by quality control at a factory before it is shipped out. (Note also that a few are randomly selected to represent an entire case.) The instrument used can detect pores as small as 13-15 microns in diameter. The head of a sperm cell is 3-5 microns in diameter. This is the rough equivalent of a tennis ball passing through a hula-hoop. If you still feel safe, consider the AIDS virus, which is 0.01 microns in diameter, roughly 400 times smaller than the sperm.

But condoms are statistically 65-90 percent effective, at least in preventing pregnancy, right? Yes, this is true. On the other hand, the "calendar method," based on a woman's menstrual cycle, is 76 percent effective without any kind of "barrier" or chemical along with it. This is because there are only about three days out of about every 30 when a woman is capable of becoming pregnant. Doesn't this help to shed some light on the condom's 10 percent failure rate?

Finally, I must admit that condoms do provide a limited amount of protection, although more limited than I think most of us realize. Aside from abstinence (my personal choice - if for no other reason, it's 100 percent effective against both pregnancy and STDs), it's better than nothing. But condoms are far from safe.

A final consideration: During a year of having sex without a condom, one doctor estimated that you have an 85 percent chance of getting a sexually-transmitted disease. With the safety of condoms as questionable as it is pertaining to protection from STDs, the question you really have to ask yourself is - would you have sex, using a condom, with someone that you knew had the AIDS virus? Safe sex in years to come will be revealed as the greatest lie ever told to our generation. Know the odds before you gamble with your future and quite possibly your life.

COLLEGIAN OBLIVIOUS TO KALEIDOSCOPE FILMS

Editor,

A recent Collegian editorial asked students to support the Varsity Theatre as switched to an art-house format. However, the Collegian seems oblivious to the existence of the Kaleidoscope Films Committee, which brings art house films, as well as cult classics and foreign films, to the Union every week.

Admission is only $1.75, which is less than half of what the Varsity charges. The sound and projection systems are both high-quality, and Forum Hall is far more spacious than the cramped confines of the Varsity.

While I think it's great that we've got another art-house in Manhattan, it is still important not to ignore the one right here on campus.

s far as national crusades go, the war on drugs has been about as successful as the conversion to the metric system.

In light of this failure it may be time to discuss other options in dealing with the drug problem options as radical as legal-

The philosophy behind legalization is there are two kinds of drug-related crimes, that of the addict and that of the system. The addict's crimes are acts of individual desperation. Eager for a fix, one may burglarize, rob or turn to prostitution to obtain the necessary

Drugs can also make an already violent person more likely to act out against others. Legalization alone would do little to combat this type of crime. Legalization would take care of crimes of the system.

Two classes of criminal would totally disappear: the drug user, in that use alone would no longer be illegal; and the drug distributor, since neither illegal smuggling, dealing nor manufacture would be necessary if drugs were legally available.

Criminal organizations that rely on drug profits from street gangs to motorcycle gangs to various ethnic mafia would thus be hurt. Those innocents previously caught in the crossfire of drug-inspired turf wars would be spared.

Finally, legal drugs would be subject to taxes. The revenue raised by the sale of drugs could be funneled toward treatment, education and law enforcement. Drug users - and not the rest of society - would for once be paying the costs associated with their drug ish step backwards. But it would seem that legalization would create increased access to drugs, and this in turn would create an increase in the number of users. An increase in users would see an increase in crimes of the addict.

In areas where drugs are already easily available and the gang warfare inspired by drug trafficking is seen by residents as more of a threat than the junkies themselves, this may be an acceptable trade-off, but elsewhere such a situation would not be tolerat-

The challenge, then, is to find a way to have legal drugs, but to keep people from from using them.

Since I have yet to hear of a plan for legalization that adequately addresses this issue, I cannot with a clear conscience advocate the legalization of anything stronger than marijuana at this time.

Still, considering the alternatives, I hold out hope that our society can mature enough to someday handle years has come and gone since her graduation, but Edith Noakes continues.

Noakes, looking out the window of her little white house with red shutters, reminisces about the college she graduated from in 1916.

She and her brother lived past the city limits of Manhattan, on 18th Street, while attending Kansas State Agriculture College.

"We lived quite primitively out in the country," Noakes said.

They rented a two-room house at 410 18th St. with no running water, no lights and no heat all for $6 a month.

"Rooms downtown were real modern with bathrooms," Noakes said, "but rent was cheaper in the country, so lots of students did it. Their rent and groceries came out of the $25 a month they had between them, she said.

At the beginning of the term, their mother wouldn't send them $1,000 like some mothers do for current students. She would send them each an extra $25 to pay for tuition and books, Noakes said.

Tuition rates were $1 a month, or $9 for the three terms during the year. The remaining $16 went to books, she Noakes said students protested when a health program was implemented, raising tuition costs 50 cents either on the month or the term.

Just as students do now, she said she walked four blocks to the 16th Street gate to go to class, walking home and back for lunch. "People didn't have cars when I first came," Noakes said. "Everybody walked everywhere. On Sundays, we went through the park to the methodist church on fifth Street." enrollment of 2,000 was a shock for someone from a small town Wakefield, she said.

"It was a Edith Louise Alsop

big change for a country girl who had never been past her backyard," Noakes said. Noakes, who studied to be a teacher, attended classes four days a week. Like most students now, she said she didn't know what she was going to be when she first got to KSAC. "Teaching was about the only thing woman could do in those days, Noakes said. She said she majored in mathematics and took all the science she could.

"Mathematics you can believe in," Noakes said. "If a thing is true, it's always true."

Courses were laid out for students until their junior year, she said. "I had to take cooking and sewing,"

1916 senior Royal Purple yearbook photo Noakes said. "Oh, I just hated that. It was just time wasted. I despised it, but I had to do it."

Students during this era were also required to attend chapel every morning, she said Some of the boys did not care too much for chapel and would walk down to the gates to smoke, because smoking was not allowed on the school grounds, Noakes said.

Chapel was a time for hometown entertainment and singing of the school song accompanied by the school orchestra, she said. "It was all home talent," Noakes said. "We didn't have to have anyone shipped in." Eventually the school only required chapel twice a week and then once a week, Noakes said. This left time for literary societies. The dues for these societies started at 10 cents; however, students complained that was too much, so they lowered it to 5 cents, Noakes said. Noakes belonged to the Franklin Literary Society, and with her blue eyes sparkling from behind her glasses, said she took great pride in memorizing and performing her readings. A competition between the seven to nine societies was once a year, she said.

The competition in the 3,000-seat auditorium required students to write, memorize and recite an oration for a grand prize of a $20 gold piece, Noakes said.

The Franklin Literary Society would have a hay rack ride every spring, and the group would picnic, build a bonfire and play ball, she said. These literary societies were in competition with the sororities and fraternities on campus, she said. "A lot of people in the community didn't approve of the sororities and fraternities," Noakes said. "They won out, though. They're still around today, and the literary societies are not."

Football and basketball were forms of entertainment then, just as they are now. "I could stand on my tiptoes and watch all the games in Memorial Stadium from my front porch," she said.

"KU was the biggest game we had." Noakes said. "Year after year, KU kept beating KSAC." Noakes said there was a shepherd's crook, and once a year during the KU/KSAC game, a class would hand it to another class to hide for the year while the other classes looked for it. She said it would never be shown in daylight until the next KU/KSAC game.

After a big win, students would gather on Poyntz Avenue for a Shirttail Parade, Noakes said.

"Boys would untuck their shirt tails, and everyone would grab onto the hips of the person in front of them and snake down the street, singing and dancing," she said. "They'd sing the school song and ask bystanders to join in."

"They would be there half the night," Noakes said. "There was never any scrape or fight."

Entertainment was not limited to ports but did not include Aggieville like it does today.

"Aggieville was a business district with a couple of banks and grocery stores," Noakes said. "They had a few

Following a three-game sweep by Arkansas (13-0), ranked No. 5 in one collegiate poll and No. 23 in another, the K-State baseball team (5-3) found itself in the doldrums.

Or so pitcher Matt Koeman said. "We were really down after the second game, and after the third we were in the doldrums," he said. "We went down there thinking we were a pretty good ball team. It really woke us up.

Heading into the series, the Cats had accumulated 90 runs in five games, an average of 18 runs per game. Its opponents had not even been close.

But the story changed as cold bats, a hard wind and poor defense held the Cats to 14 runs for the series as they lost 6-7, 5-9 and 3-11 to the Razorbacks.

As the starting pitcher for K-State on Friday, right-hander Koeman (1-1) said Arkansas was a solid ball team that was

"They don't have a lot of exceptional power, but they have great speed," Koeman said. "They have three or four guys who can steal second or third base. That can cause problems for you as a pitcher, because it can start off a big inning.

And big innings are exactly what hurt the Cats.

In game one, the Cats were ahead by three runs going into the bottom of the eighth. But the Razorbacks refused to die and came back to tie the game at six.

It all ended in the bottom of the 10th inning, as Arkansas moved its runners. With two outs, relief pitcher Brian Thompson, in for Koeman, hit the third batter he faced that inning, second baseman Kenderick Moore. Mike Moriarity, in as a pinch hitter, singled, advancing Moore to second.

A second pinch hitter, Ryan Lundquist, came to bat. But before he could make contact, Moriarity stole second as Moore stole third. Lundquist then singled, advancing both runners and ending the game.

The story was very similar in game two as the Cats and the Hogs were tied at five going into the bottom of the sev-

But a four-run inning by the Razorbacks, led by shortstop Jason McConnell, was enough to keep the Defensively, Koeman said the Cats still need to work on some basics.

"We're a little raw yet," he said. "We hadn't been put in a lot of tough situations yet. Arkansas really exposed some of our weaknesses."

But those weaknesses were not very weak, Koeman said.

"We know we're capable of being a really solid team," he said.

"Offensively, the pitchers got a little ahead of our batters in the count. We weren't being very aggressive at the plate. In the third game, we hit a lot of balls hard, but the wind was blowing in and they didn't travel far."

Cats, UNL win titles in recreation tourney

The Association of College Unions International Region 11 Recreation Games Tournament was at the K-State Student Union Feb. 24 and 25.

Students from colleges around the area competed in billiards, bowling and table ten-

Students from across the region were competing for the top spot in their category for a chance to go to nationals against top qualifiers from the 15 regions across the country. The national tournaments will be in various cities around the country. The top billiards winners will move on to competition at Gainesville, Fla., while the bowling and table tennis top competitors will move on to Atlanta.

"The tournament is held here every year because we are the only school left in the Union that is big enough to handle it," recreation manager Terri Eddy said. "This is our sixth-consecutive year of hosting the tourna-

"The numbers are a little down this year from last year. Several schools didn't come for whatever reasons."

Thirteen schools competed in the billiards eight-ball, double-elimination tournament, in which Terry Young from Wichita State won the men's division, and Kris Roth from K-State won the women's division.

In table-tennis competition, nine men competed in individual competition along with two men's doubles teams. Josh Bartel from K-State won the individual men's top spot, while the doubles team of Bartel and Joel Moots from K-State won the team com-

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln men's and women's bowling teams lived up to their No. 1 ranking as they easily won the top spots in both divisions.

Nine men's and seven women's teams entered the competition in which the Nebraska men's team blew away the rest of the competition, with a total score of 8,899 dropped pins, 356 more than its closest competitor. K-State placed sixth in the competition with a total score of 7,835 dropped pins.

In the women's competition, the UNL team won the competition by a total of 776 dropped pins. Its total score of 8,566 would have been good enough for second place in the men's division. The second place women's team was Wichita State, which dropped 7,790 pins. K-State did not enter af women's team, as no students signed up to try out for competition.

Wildcats' seniors proved they have more than talent

Myview

It was Senior Day last Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, and it was the last game for Tyrone Davis, Elliot Hatcher, George Hill and Brian Gavin. They were all supposed to start. They did.

Hatcher and Davis were supposed to lead their team to an upset against the No. 5 team in the nation. That would have been a nice way to finish their last home game.

But it was on Senior Day, and three freshmen showed the crowd of 13,500 what it could expect for years to come.

Leading the way was freshman guard Ayome May. Before Saturday's contest, May was averaging 6.6 points, 3.6 rebounds and just about two steals per game. On top of that, he had shot 18 of 30 from the charity stripe (60 percent).

Against Kansas, he surpassed all of those marks. May collected a career-high 20 points, six rebounds and four steals. At the charity stripe, May was a perfect four-of-four.

Maybe not as noticeable was the play of freshmen Manny Dies and Shawn Rhodes. Playing nearly 11 minutes, Rhodes recorded only two points but had two blocks and a steal. Playing in his longest stint in quite a while, Dies played nearly 17 minutes. Dies recorded three points, two blocks and two steals. His only field goal of the game was a hesitated, thunderous dunk

"It seemed like old times with that dunk," Dies said.

"I was waiting, because I was worried about traveling. But anytime you can get a dunk like that, it will give you some confidence.'

So, it was on Senior Day when the freshmen and two sophomores scored 33 out of K-State's 66 points.

"Coach was subbing them in and out throughout the entire game," Hatcher said. "They did a good job when they were in. They are the future for K-State basketball."

Many might look at the performance of seniors Tyrone Davis and Elliot Hatcher and be disappointed. Davis was 4-of-12 from the field, and Hatcher was 6-of-16. Plus, many might think Hatcher didn't play a good defensive game, compared to the play of Jacque Vaughn.

Yes, Vaughn was 4-of-5 from the three-point mark. scoring 20 points overall. But that wasn't all Hatcher's fault. I'm here to tell you that given the same circumstances again, Vaughn would not have the same performance.

Vaughn is not the type of shooter who is always going to be able to just pull up off the dribble and train the long bombs. During the years, he just hasn't been the most accurate three-point shooter. I will give Vaughn credit for having a great game, but he was just in the zone. Come tournament time, don't expect to see similar performances out of

With Davis, you must remember that he was playing on a sore ankle that was injured against Missouri. But Davis kept on through the pain, playing nearly 38 minutes.

"I was playing through a lot of pain today," Davis said. "I'm very sore and tired." But the true class of these seniors was shown after the game. Coming off your last home game, with a tough defeat, feeling tired and sore, it would have been easy to skip out on the media and go home. But Davis and Hatcher didn't. They came out and answered all the questions the media had to toss at them. Even though most of the spotlight went to the youth of K-State, two of K-State's seniors showed them the true meaning of senior leadership on Senior Day.

LAWRENCE - Jacque Vaughn, the Kansas assist specialist who has suddenly turned into a scorer, had 17 points Monday night, and the Jayhawks third-ranked turned back a Missouri challenge early in the second half for an 87-65 win.

Kansas (24-2 overall, 12-1 Big 8) had a 53-35 lead trimmed in half when the Tigers scored the first nine points in the first four minutes of the second half. But Vaughn hit a three-pointer and made a free throw as the Jayhawks pulled away.

Vaughn, who scored 20 points in Kansas' win over K-State last weekend, was backed by 16 points from Scot Pollard.

Missouri (16-12, 6-7) was unable to handle Kansas' press and fell behind 68-47 with about 14 minutes left after Pollard finished off a three-point play. Sammie Haley led the Tigers with 12 points. Julian and Jason Winfield Sutherland added nine each. Missouri, whose chances for an NCAA tournament bid were further damaged, finished with 24 turnovers. The Tigers, who handed Kansas its only conference loss this season, may now have to win the Big 8's tournament to make the NCAA The Kansas defensive pressure continually forced Missouri into some erratic passing, and the physical inside play of the Jayhawks proved frustrating. Tigers coach Norm Stewart and center Simeon Haley were both given technical fouls in the half for protesting the officiating on

Kansas' home court. Departing Kansas seniors Sean Pearson and Calvin Rayford provided some immediate spark. Pearson scored the first basket on a driving layup after the tipoff, and Rayford stole the ball on Missouri's first possession and drove the length of the court for a But despite 12 first-half turnovers, the Tigers hung with Kansas and gained a 17-17 tie with just over 13 minutes to play on a three-point-er by Sutherland.

Both teams broke down after that.

Missouri could not inbound the ball as Kansas put on a press and was forced to call a timeout.

After the timeout, the Tigers threw the ball away The Jayhawks finally got Wildcats' netters shock Wichita State in duals

tributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team continued its successful spring dual campaign Saturda, as it defeated in-state rival Wichita State, 8-1. The win improved the Cats' record to 2-1 this spring.

K-State entered the contest with an even 1-1 record. Wichita State entered the contest as two-time defending Missouri Valley Conference Champions.

"They had a very good team this year," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "Their top-two doubles teams were strong last year, and they look a lot stronger this year." As strong as the Shockers' doubles team appeared to be, the Cats had little trouble in defeating them. Playing at No. 1 doubles for a change was Karina Kuregian and Lena Piliptchak. In previous meets, it was Yana Dorodnova and Karen Nicholson playing at the No. 1

"Over the past couple of weeks, Karina and Lena have been playing much better in practice," Bietau said. "But I wouldn't call any of our changes permanent."

Kuregian and Piliptchak easily adjusted the No. 1 spot, defeating the Shockers' No. I team of Jane White and Alison Passmore. Kuregian and Piliptchak cruised to a 8-4 victory. The No. 2 doubles team, Dorodnova and Nicholson, cruised to a smashing 8-2 victory against Dana Lomshek and Annette Hartman.

In the No. 3 spot, Nikki Lagerstrom and Chris Schulte teamed up to win a hard-fought doubles match. They beat Lisa Field and Colleen McLarty in a tight match, 9-7. "I'm not sure why they had their No. 1 player playing at the No. 3 doubles slot,"

Bietau said. "But from my perspective, it was good to have our No. 3 doubles team play and beat a good quality team."

In singles action, the Cats took five out of six from the Shockers. The only defeat for the Cats came at the No. 3 spot, where Piliptchak provided the most exciting match of the day. Piliptchak was defeated by White in three sets, 6-4, 5-7, 5-7. "Lena was in a very close match. She had some opportunities to come out with a victory," Bietau said. At the No. 1 spot, K-State's Dorodnova served up another victory in singles play, defeating Field, 6-1, 6-4. Kuregian had not played in K-State's first two matches this season, as she was recovering from Graves' Disease. Kuregian made the most of her first match this season, as she easily defeated Annette Hartman, 6-0, 6-1.

"Karina looked very good today," Bietau said. "She didn't get worn out in her singles match, and she completely took over in

At the No. 6 spot for the Cats was Schulte picking up a victory.

After winning the first set 6-2, Schulte dropped the second, 2-6. Schulte was able to come back and take the third set 6-3.

Also picking up wins for K-State in singles action was Nicholson and Lagerstrom. Both gathered up straight set victories.

Homepages are popping up on the Internet faster than ever before, and people are still asking how they can hop aboard. It's pretty simple. They can pay to have someone else do it, or they can do it themselves. This article will show you some of the web editors available. These pages were previewed using Netscape.

Sausage Software Homepage (http://www.sausage.com/)

For my money, Sausage's "HotDog" is the best shareware HTML (hyper text markup language) editor on the market today. It is quick and easy, designed for anyone who wants to make a cool homepage.

This program has a spell checker, point-and-click interface and good tutorials to help authors become comfortable. The only thing I don't like about this program is that after 30 days it won't start without a registration number. While you visit try its new animation program called Igor. It's a fun toy to play with.

SoftQuad Inc.

(http://www.sq.com:80/)
This is the home of HoTMetaL, the editor I recommend for novice writers. This is the most foolproof of the editors. This program takes care of all coding. The writer just needs to keep the facts straight. After taking the tutorial any user should be able to explore different possibilities for homepages easily and have the page look close to what was envisioned.

The user controls how much of the actual source code (the language the computer will read) is displayed. This will help speed the learning of HTML or turn it off. The tradeoff with the computer double-checking the author is that the program doesn't like new commands. By the time this happens most people will be switching over to a different editor anyway.

Kenn Nesbitt's WebEdit HTML Editor (http://www.nesbitt.com/)

Certain people don't like HotDog for some reason or another. If that's you, try WebEdit. It's a good editor and runs much like the competition with a few surprises.

It has a built-in image editor that allows writers the ability to make image maps (pictures that allow surfers to click on different areas and go to different pages), and it has its own previewer so Netscape, Mosaic, or any other browser is unnecessary. (This is great if your connection to campus is through a slip connection.)

A Beginner's Guide to HTML (http://www.ncsa.uiuc.edu/demoweb/ html-primer.html)

This is a required read. ANYONE who wants to write a homepage should read this first.

Word of the week: FAQ

FAQ's (a.k.a. frequently asked questions) are set up to help provide surfers with the basics on a certain sub-

For example, the FAQ for the Beatles would contain information on each of their heights, weights, albums, and birthdays; but it probably doesn't contain the name of John's dog when he was three years old. Always check the FAQs before asking questions.

Kuwait still feels effects of invasion

AbdullNaser T. Abdullah

staff reporter

Kuwaitis celebrated the fifth anniversary of the liberation of their country Monday. But for many, the anniversary brought back painful memories of torture, destruction and imprisonment.

"The celebrations are much different than the liberation year," Imad Dashti, graduate in economics, said.

The liberation year brought feelings of jubilation and happiness, Dashti said.

"Since then, the euphoria died down as people started realizing the magnitude of what had happened," he said.

"People were missing, others were dead, and the pains of the months of terrors surfaced as anxieties, resentments and grief," Dashti said.

Thousands of Kuwaitis continue to suffer the psychological trauma resulting from witnessing or experiencing executions, tortures and imprisonment, he said

The Kuwaiti government established the Al-Rigga Clinic for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorders to help treat citizens and expatriates. The clinic is staffed by Kuwaiti physicians, psychologists and psychiatrists.

Part of the problem, said Bothayna Salim, a child psychologist based at the clinic, is getting people to accept that they have a problem.

The clinic has started a program in Kuwait's schools to train families and teachers to recognize symptoms and encourage them to seek the professional help the clinic provides.

"The invasion destroyed the infrastructure of Kuwait," Dashti said.

The liberators found a Kuwait with no food, communication, electricity or water, he said.

More than 720 oil wells caught on fire during the last hours of the invasion. Scientists from around the world predicted it would take five to 10 years to extinguish all of the burning oil wells. The last oil well was capped in November

"We reached a milestone when the last oil well was capped," Dashti said. The extinguishing of all the oil wells in such a short time gave the Kuwaitis hope of rebuilding Kuwait to how it was before the invasion, he said.

"There remains more than 600 Kuwaitis imprisoned in Iraq," said Ali Sahaf, publications coordinator at the Ministry of Information in

"Until the hostages return, the liberation of Kuwait remains unfinished, and the bitter days of infamy remain unabated," Sahaf said.

Dashti said Kuwait can never fully recover from the invasion.

"It is clear that things will never be the same again and that much of what was special in Kuwait has been damaged, or even lost," Dashti

Kuwait continues to seek the assistance of Red Cross, United Nations and all international mediators to secure the release of the hostages in Iraq, Sahaf said.

STUDENT FINANCIAL AID

Deadline draws near for financial assistance

Nikki Prentice staff reporter

More than 70 percent of K-State students receive some type of financial assistance.

Students planning to receive fi-nancial aid for the '96-'97 school year need to apply by the March 1 priority deadline to be eligible for government assistance, Larry Moeder, director of financial aid,

Students wanting aid need to complete the free application form for student financial aid.

'Students need to complete the application and have it postmarked by March 1. The application is sent to Illinois, where the federal student process department is located. A pre-addressed envelope is included with the application," Moeder said.

Three weeks after sending the application, students will receive a student aid report summarizing information the student included on the application, such as how much money the family can contribute toward college.

The application is also electronically sent to the school the student will attend during the 1996-97 school year.

The student's family contribution is compared to a predetermined cost of what college expenses should be at the university for the family's income. This amount is decided by the school.

Moeder said if a college determines it takes $9,000 to cover college expenses, and the government determines a family can pay $2,000, then the result is a $7,000 loan need.

Students accepted for financial aid will receive a financial aid award letter at the beginning of April. The letter will state the amount of money the government will confer to students for the next school year.

"After students receive the award letter, they have two weeks to send back a reply letter stating to accept or reject the aid," Moeder said. "If students accept the aid, the money will be awarded at fee payment next fall."

Moeder said all students are eligible for assistance.

'The program is set up so that all students regardless of their parents' income can now receive some type of federal assistance," Moeder said. "That's why it is beneficial to apply."

Students who have received financial assistance before and want to apply again can either reapply by filing a new application or use the renewal application sent by the federal processors in January.

"Make sure you meet the March 1 application deadline. Also, respond to all correspondence from the federal government and the financial aid office on campus," he said.

Financial assistance has benefits and setbacks, Moeder said.

"Sometimes it's hard for students to afford all education expenses, so federal assistance is here to cover that gap.

"The frustrating part is the amount of money students have to borrow to cover education expenses," Moeder said.

"I encourage students not to borrow if they don't have to and to use it as a last resort," Moeder said.

K-State students who receive financial aid usually graduate with an average debt of $11,000. This amount is still a little below the national average, Moeder said.

Applications are available in Fairchild 104 during office hours or in the application rack outside the financial aid office.

For more information, contact the Office of Student Financial Assistance at 532-6420.

According to NCAA and Big 8 Conference rules, K-State will keep its on-the-court record of 14-15, 5-9, for historical purposes. However, conference wins against Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Missouri before Feb. 9 will be erased for purposes of tournament seeding.

K-State will now be the eighth seed in the Big 8 Tournament instead of seventh, facing No. 1 seed Kansas in the first round.

Wildcat players, who were not told by athletic officials of the forfeits, said they were surprised at the news.

"That's news to me," sophomore point guard Amanda Chamberlain said. "I haven't heard anything."

Senior post Patty Johnson agreed. 'It's kind of a shock," Johnson

Players weren't told last week of the University's decision to move Agler into an administrative position in the Office of Institutional Advancement. Most heard the news from friends or read it in local news-

"That's how we find things out, in the newspapers and on the radio," freshman wing Sara Munson said. "Maybe it's for our own good - to help keep our minds on basketball.

But it's strange to hear it this way." Johnson said players have been among the last to know from the beginning. "I was kind of disappointed when this all started, and they told us a couple hours before the game," she said. "I know it had just recently developed, but it was a big shock.

Students must have a composite score on the American College Testing Program exam, ACT, of 21. That is close to the average score for a Kansas high school senior. Or they must rank in the top third of their high school graduating class or complete a precollege course load with a grade point average of 2.0 on a 4.0 scale.

The schedule would include four years of English and three years each of math, social studies and natural sciences. Out-of-state residents would have to meet the same standards but would need a 2.5 on a 4.0 scale.

The standards would not apply to students over 21, whether they have a high school diploma or a general equivalency degree, or GED.

In addition, each institution could exempt up to 10 percent of its incoming freshman class from the requirements, but only Kansans would be eligible for an exemption.

Many argued Monday that allowing a window for students who would not otherwise be admitted under the proposed guidelines could let universities admit athletes only.

But Tanner said the window was designed for "late bloomers" - high school students who do not meet the standards because they did not know they wanted to go to college early enough or did not do well enough early on in their high school educa-

"We did have another call Sunday night of a grass fire at 9:30 p.m. near Randolph," he said. "Yet, rain put that fire out.

That fire appeared to be set intentionally, Messer said.

"The biggest problem with wild fires is that fire moves so fast because it is so dry," he said.

A fire could get going today, although it is more humid and misting in some spots, Messer said. "We will not have to worry about the Konza Prairie any more this year," After 45 Konza Prairie workers and volunteers fought 3,322 acres of fire Sunday. Crews finished mopping up Monday, Dave Hartnett, director of Konza Prairie, said. Ninety-six percent of the land at Konza was scheduled for burning this year, Hartnett said.

"As far as research goes, we were pretty lucky," Hartnett said.

About 75 acres were not scheduled for burning this year, including part of a 20-year experimentation plot.

Land at the Konza Prairie is divided into experimentation plots, which helps determine the effects of wild fires on the prairie habitat, Hartnett

The fire destroyed a fence post around the bison corral and a new prairie chicken blind. All bison were safely moved to the west side of Konza during the fire. Hartnett said he estimated damages

Speed conflicts with safety

Chris Oakley

City commissioners faced a dilemma between ensuring the safety of some Manhattan residents and violating a Kansas state statute at a work session

Commissioners had to decide whether to decrease the speed limit in the Stagg Hill residential area, which could possibly violate the Kansas Uniform Act Regulating Traffic. According to the act, municipalities can not decrease the speed limit in residential areas unless a study

After two fatal pedestrian accidents in 1993 involving two Manhattan youths, the 1993 city commission decided to reduce the speed limit to 25 mph.

Assistant city attorney Bernard Irvine told commissioners he felt reducing the speed further could violate the statute. "I don't think the city has authority to change the speed limit," Irvine said. Irvine said if the commission did change the limit, anyone who was issued has been concluded to prove the area is a a ticket could protest it and the attorney representing the city would be forced to justify the limit. "The problem would be enforcement," Irvine said. "Technically, I don't believe that ticket would be enforceable.' Jerry Petty, director of community development, presented commissioners with a study done after the 25-mph limit was enacted. He said the study showed that drivers ignored the limit and drove the same speed as under the 30-mph limit.

LOCAL BUSINESS

Restaurants seek buyers in Plaza West

Former managers raise food prices, kill business

Sara Edwards

Three restaurants in the Plaza West area are in the process of changing management after their parent corporation, Restaurant Management Group, lost money and had to pull out.

The Chicago Bar and Grill was the most recent restaurant to close. The restaurant closed down Sunday. The other two that closed are Cactus Jack's Mexican Cafe and Cantina, and Park Avenue Catering and Banquet.

"Restaurant Management Group was from the east. They didn't know the area," S.M. Samarrai, RAC Enterprises Executive Director, said. "They failed miserably."

The three restaurants are located in Plaza West, which is owned by the RAC Corp. RAC is currently looking for new people to come in and take over the Chicago Bar and Grill, Samarrai said.

Restaurant Management Group pulled out in December, leaving Samarrai with taxes and paychecks to pay and debts incurred.

He said he was in the process of borrowing money to pay the debts. He did not specify how much he had lost, but he said that it also owed RAC $120,000 that RAC did not collect in rent. Clint Flesher, an assistant manager at the Chicago Bar and Grill, said Samarrai had probably lost between $450,000 to $1 million of his own money trying to keep it open over the past year. Since January, the Chicago Bar and Grill has been under the management of another group Samarrai hired. Although the restaurant has been profitable for the last month, Samarrai said he decided to close the restaurant for good because it had lost so much money. "We had to. When you lose money, you don't operate with losses," he said. Flesher said the bank told Samarrai to close down the Chicago Bar and Grill around 4 p.m. last Friday because of all the debts. He said the employees could have been informed better, and the news came at a bad time. The three restaurants have gone through many Durango Corp. ran the three restaurants. That corporation got into trouble when it tried to expand too fast, and Restaurant Management Group took over. Samarrai said the Restaurant Management Group came in and took the restaurants over, but operators in the past year. As of last April, the there were problems from the start when it fired the old people and hired new, inexperienced people and paid them too much.

"They ran the business down to nothing. They were not really profitable," Samarrai said.

Another problem was that Restaurant Management Group increased prices. It increased prices 25 percent, and profits went down 50 percent, Samarrai said,

Samarrai said that Restaurant Management Group was originally going to buy the restaurants until it ran into financial trouble

"Restaurant Management Group was hired to manage the restaurant. They were going to buy, but they decided not to, justifiably. They were going to fail," he said. RAC is looking for new people to come in and take over the Chicago Bar and Grill. Samarrai said they have placed ads in Topeka, Kansas City and Denver. Samarrai said they are looking for somebody with money and experience who would stick around. They are currently talking to three different parties interested in taking over the restaurant. When it does reopen, the name and menu will be different, he said.

Cactus Jack's has already changed owners, and the name has changed to El Kazador. It could be opening up as early as next week, Samarrai said they will rehire many of the employees when the restaurant reopens.

"I'll bet you that they get back 65 percent of the staff," Flesher said.

KYLE WYATT/Collegia

Kathrine Walker, education coordinator for the Marlanna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said she wants to make the new art museum engaging for visitors.

REASONS VISIT

A visit to an art museum might sound as tempting as a root canal for most K-Staters.

As Kathrine Walker sees it, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, which opens in September, will be such a hotbed of cultural events students will have to find a reason to stay Walker is the education coordinator for the Beach art museum.

"Principally, museums' main function is as informal educational institutions," Walker said.

"Art museums have had an ivory-tower feeling. We're lucky there are children's museums and science museums - we can learn from them and why they work so well for people," she said.

"A museum needs to engage," she said. "Art museums have had a hard time drawing people, because art is considered for the elite," she

"The challenge is to get people to understand art is obviously a high form of material culture, but it is still a product of a culture or civilization and can be used to help us understand people." Providing opportunities and reasons to visit an art museum are the heart and soul of Walker's job. The curator may create exhibits, the director may pay the bills, but the educator makes the museum relevant to its visitors. The art museum will have many functions on the K-State campus.

Scholastically, the art, architecture and history departments and education college will be able to use the museum well, Walker said. "One of my ideas is to work with freshman composition, so maybe one of the writing assignments your freshman year is to come in and write an expository piece based on an artwork in the collection," she said. Walker said this would be an easy way to get students into the museum because a professor could require it.

"Once they are in and see what a positive experience it can be, they want to come back," she

Curator envisions Beach art museum as refuge for all K-Staters to enjoy, relax

However, Walker said, more challenging is getting to become a part of the campus. "I'd like to see poetry readings in the gallery based on some of the art pieces," she said. "A lot of times it is nice to go to an after-hours musical presentation and visit the galleries during intermission. As part of the museum's diverse programming, Walker said she expects the museum to stay open on certain nights and occasionally offer music. "The arts can interact with each other so beautifully," Walker said.

Walker said she does not want museum programming to overlap with things already offered in the community.

"If we do a film series, it will really be focused on art and probably some aspect of the collection,"

"We will not be showing 'Pulp Fiction."" The activities room, located on the ground floor, has its own entrance, which enables it to be used after the museum has closed.

"We're hoping to use that lot for after-hours events, workshops and visiting artist presentations," Walker said.

"We could do special workshops for different organizations," she said.

For example, a lot of students are involved in Big Brothers/Big Sisters — we could do a special workshop for them," she said.

Aside from artistic events, Walker said she sees the museum also as a place for reflection. "If you're running around and you have one hour for lunch, you may want to think about coming to the museum for some quiet time to eat and relax," she said.

Walker, who grew up in Emporia, got her first taste of museum education working for the Nantucket Historical Association in Nantucket, Mass., as an assistant curator.

"The woman I worked for couldn't stand people, so she kept pushing docent training and school programs onto my plate," Walker said.

"Which was great because I quickly learned I did not like to spend all my time sitting in an attic putting little accession numbers on objects was much happier working with people."

After working at two other museums as educational coordinators, Walker was hired at the Beach museum in January 1995.

"As far as I was concerned, it was the chance of lifetime," Walker said.

"I thought maybe it was time to come home after 14 years." The job description accentuated experience in diversity programming, which Walker said "is right up my alley.' Walker received a bachelor's degree in history/British studies from Stanford University, where she had extensive course work in art history. archaeology and classics. She received her master's in American history, historical archaeology and museum studies as a combined degree from the College of William and

Most time consuming for Walker is her role in operating the docent program, which currently consists of 22 people, three of whom are students and two of whom are art teachers from Manhattan schools.

Art museums have had a hard time drawing people, because art is considered for the elite. The challenge is to get people to understand art is obviously a high form of material culture, but it is still a product of a culture or civilization and can be used to help us understand people.

PHOENIX (AP) - At the root of Sen. Bob Dole's presidential dilemma is this sobering fact: While half of Republican primary voters view him as the strongest candidate against President Clinton, nearly three-fourths are voting for someone else.

It is a telling dynamic, offering evidence not only of Dole's weaknesses as a candidate and communicator but also of the testy mood of a GOP primary electorate that jumbled the presidential race at every opportunity.

▶ BEST FRIEND OF ESCAPED PRISONER TURNS HIM IN TO AUTHORITIES

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) - When Robin Wolfe heard the voice of her best friend on the telephone last week, she began to shake.

It was Geoffrey Ward, a convict serving eight life sentences with no chance of parole for a crime spree that included raping a woman and a teen-age girl, and strangling them with the cord to his electric guitar.

"I'm out," Ward told Wolfe, then held up the receiver so she could hear trucks rolling by.

Ward had scaled the Powhatan Correctional Center's razor-wire fences and was running wounded with a manhunt on his tail. He only wanted to know one thing: Would she help him? "I fell on my knees and prayed,"

Wolfe told the Associated Press on Monday.

Wolfe borrowed money to drive to Virginia from her lowa home. She packed a bag with medical supplies and then called a friend for advice. Then she called police to turn

Ward in. Prison authorities found him hiding in woods north of the prison last Thursday, 30 hours after he escaped into the dark, foggy countryside. He was waiting for Wolfe, whom he had called twice, including once from crossroads near where he was caught.

"This was the hardest thing I have ever done in my life," said Wolfe, who asked that the name of her hometown not be released.

"It was head over heart. because in my heart I wanted him to get out of there - to start a new

■ 3 STATES TO HAVE PRIMARIES

PHOENIX (AP) -Republicans in three states are heading to the polls, with most of the attention focused on Arizona, and the potential GOP presidential race could become even more scrambled as it moves west.

With 39 delegates at stake today in the winner-take-all voting Arizona held the biggest prize of the campaign to date. Voters in North Dakota today will pick 18 delegates in each state.

Commentator Pat Buchanan banked on momentum to carry the day in Arizona. He stumped relentlessly across the state in the closing days, while rivals were already looking to the future.

"If we can break out of Arizona, you're going to see an explosion," Buchanan said.

K-STATE JAZZ FESTIVAL

Basie Orchestra might return

QUICKread

► McCain Auditorium hopes to book the Basie Orchestra again next year as part of the annual K-State Jazz Festival, due to its success this semester.

he Count Basie Orchestra is tentatively on the road back to K-State for next February as part of the third-annual K-State Jazz Festival.

The overwhelming success of this year's festival, which the Basie Orchestra headlined, has already spawned planning and excitement for next year.

"It went extremely well," Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies and coordinator of the festival, said.

"With 1,700 people in attendance, it was the number one jazz festival draw in Kansas - previously held by Wynton Marsalis," Wilson said.

The festival was a day-long event on Saturday, Feb. 3, which offered musical clinics for K-State and high school students, performances and lectures.

"Because of that success, we'll be able to get some sort of corporate sponsorship next year," he said.

Wilson said the Basie Orchestra will be back with a new singer, Diane Shore, although he will not know for sure for a couple of weeks.

"In my last conversation with Dennis, I think we're on track to see the Basie band back next year," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said.

Martin said he is not sure the band will work well for the festival and clinics again, but that is determined by Wilson.

"There are many people in this community who are members of the 'been-there, done-that' fraternity, and I don't know what the repeat business would be from that segment of the audience," Martin said.

"I would suspect among the high school students who came for the activities there would be a goodly number of high school students because of the festival activity and the fact you have a big name ensemble available for these things," he said.

"I'm always leery of contemplating bringing someone back a second time.' The Basie Orchestra was not originally part of the 1995-96 McCain season, Martin said. "I had already done the season, and we decided that since the festival was a good thing to have some synergy, we put the concert in," Martin said. The Basie concert was a regular featured event of the McCain performance series but was scheduled during the jazz festival. McCain produced its own flier to promote the concert, while Wilson produced a poster to promote both the concert and the festival. Wilson said the relationship between McCain and the jazz festival is much more positive since the festival.

"Working together, we can save money and reduce it to one poster," Wilson said. "Richard Martin has financial support connections in town I don't have."

Martin said he would like to see the festival supported by either an instrument manufacturer, a foundation or an

Wilson said the way the concert was produced created problems.

"McCain sponsored the Basie concert, which was part of the festival, and we had the festival, which was part of the Basie concert," he said.

Wilson said he wanted the Basie concert as part of the McCain season because McCain represents the best in arts in Manhattan.

"To have our festival attached to McCain means quality in presentation and quality in artistry," he said.

Martin said, "Obviously, since this was something the jazz festival was connected to, there would not have been the Count Basie Orchestra on campus without the jazz festival."

"McCain is the unit within the University that booked the orchestra," he said. "We signed off on the contract. We were responsible for producing the program books, the flier and the advertising for it."

"McCain's direct interest, or responsibility, was for the concert on Saturday," he said.

"We were not selling the festival we were trying to sell tickets to the concert," Martin said.

Wilson said the actual cost of the festival has not been figured. He said it would be hard to know the total cost because so much was donated and many services offered free of charge that he could not put a dollar amount on everything.

All of the money to support the festival was raised privately, Wilson said. "It's my dream to get it to the point where the daytime events can be free,"

Wilson said. Wilson said if the festival continues to grow in support, he and Martin have considered moving it to Bramlage Coliseum.

"That would be great, but we're looking way ahead," he said.

Officers experience educational system at K-State campus

 Military leaders visit Manhattan, tour University facilities

Brent Smitko

K-State's small-town atmosphere and modern facilities surprised many of the 90 international officers representing 70 countries who visited Tuesday, and it left them with a positive impression of the University.

"I'm amazed that a university such as this is in Manhattan," Maj. Hans Hoogstraten, from the Netherlands, said.

"European universities are usually in the cities," he said.

The officers were here as part of the Fort Leavenworth Command and Staff College, which studies military techniques.

Hoogstraten said he has been a part of the program for one year and has savored the opportunity to

"It's been a good experience to come here and study new techniques," Hoogstraten said.

The program at Fort Leavenworth is made up of the 90 international students and 900 Americans, Hoogstraten said.

The group met in the morning with Richard Elkins, director of admissions, who went through information about K-State. This was followed by lunch at the Holidome. Later in the afternoon, the group returned to campus and was given tours by ROTC cadets.

Lt. Col. Vitaeijur Vaiknoras, Lithuania, said he was impressed by the amount of money spent on University resources for students and faculty.

But K-State was not at all what he had expected, Vaiknoras said. He said he was trying to compare K-State to Vienius University

"It is the oldest university in eastern Europe and was established in the 16th century," he

"There are so many unique opportunities offered here and not in Lithuania," Vaiknoras said.

"I wish my daughter could come here."

Vaiknoras was chosen to come to the United States by a specialty board and is the first Lithuanian to participate in such a program, he

But that is not the case for all of the international officers in the program at Fort Leavenworth.

Maj. Eric Bonnemaison from France said he had an easier time getting the opportunity to participate in the program.

"In France it works more like a student exchange," Bonnemaison

Bonnemaison said he was surprised by the information he learned about K-State at the director's office

"I didn't expect there to be such a large student body," he said. "The number of students are comparable to France, but there are more universities." In Paris there are about seven or eight universities just in the city, he said.

"Also, I couldn't believe that there were students representing all of the states," Bonnemaison said.

Students at K-State and in the United States in general seem harder working, he said.

"In France it is free to go to the university," Bonnemaison said. "There seems to be much more motivation for students here."

The group, which arrived Monday evening, had the opportunity to visit Aggieville. Some of the group spent the night at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

"It was Monday night, so it wasn't very busy," Hoogstraten said, "But we didn't get back until 3 a.m.

University needs some lessons in respect

QUICKread ► The University showed the women's basketball team a lack of respect by not informing them of decisions before informing the media.

When K-State decided to forfeit 11 games out of the women's basketball season, it informed the media, and the media informed the public.

The sad thing is the public was not the only party informed by the media. The players were also told by the media, through stories and reporters calling to get their response to the news.

It is outrageous the University did not have enough respect for our players to prepare them ahead of time. But lack of respect is a common theme between the University and the women on that team.

Both Coach Brian Agler and player Carlene Mitchell were suspended from the team. But Agler has received a new job in the Office of Institutional Advancement, while Mitchell remains suspended.

The University apparently continues to support Agler, even though he is no longer coach.

But Mitchell has been left to dangle in the winds of rumor, with her reputation being trashed by ever-increasing tales of her transgressions. The University has not respected Mitchell enough to tell the public the truth of what happened so the rumor mill can be put to rest. Mitchell becomes the convenient scapegoat in this

The lack of respect must stop. The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has a responsibility to do two things: Respect the women players enough to let them be the first to know what is going on with the team, and tell the public exactly what Mitchell and Agler did to earn their suspensions.

The only way the players can prepare themselves for reporters' questions is if they know the facts beforehand. And the only way Mitchell can defend herself is if the truth is out there.

Shame on smokers

f you saw me walking across campus with my head down the other day, I was not ignoring you.

My head was bowed in shame - shame at the deplorable appearance of our campus. It is not that the lawns need mowing or the buildings are in disrepair. It is not even the absence of a modern parking garage that makes our campus an eyesore.

It's cigarette butts.

No, my head was not bowed in shame. Not really. I was counting - and the results of my survey might be surprising. Between Putnam and Kedzie halls (one is my humble home, and the other is my place of employment - I'm not sure which is which), I counted 291 discarded cigarette butts. I found them on and around the sidewalk, trying to blend into the dull gray of the concrete. I found them in the bushes, where smokers thought no one could see them. I found them clustered around doors like the poor addicts who left them - only to later take a drag on another. Beyond that our campus looks right peachy, even without a parking garage. But the butts are repulsive I am all for smoking. At least I am all for adults having the right to decide to pollute their own bodies and take responsibility for that decision, preferably as far away from me as possible. Hell, I am for legalizing pot, so I cannot much argue against getting rid of cigarettes. And I am glad that as smoking's popularity has decreased, smokers have become more and more accommodating of the needs and desires of non-smokers

Most will actually put out their cigarettes on request - even in the smoking section. But I do wish people who smoke would do so more responsibly, and that means discarding their cigarette butts in appropriate receptacles. And that would not be too incredibly hard to do. I like to drink Coke, and I occasionally finish my refreshing - though potentially addictive - beverage between classes. But I have never simply left my empty cup or can lying on the sidewalk or tossed it into the bushes. I wait until I reach the next trash can, even when my hands are cold.

For some time, I have noticed the tendency of smokers to litter and not consider it littering. And where there are smokers,

Just ask the folks who work at the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, a good portion of which was scorched Sunday. One highway patrol officer on the scene said he suspected a cig-I know this was an isolated incident, and the verdict is not in yet as to what caused the blaze. And I do not expect the campus to go up in flames because of some stray cigarette butt. But the message it sends is a poignant one.

The reckless handling of a cigarette butt can be dangerous

In fact, from 1990-94, smoking was the second- or thirdleading cause of grass fires every year, according to John Weckerling, research analyst for the state fire marshal's office. And with more than 7 percent of residential fires caused by cigarettes, Weckerling said smoking is the fourth-leading cause of house fires. All it takes is a little common sense and respect. Extinguish your cigarette when you are done with it, then look for the nearest ashtray. No mess, no fuss - and no need to call 911.

very culture has its defining characteristics. The boundaries of such a definition aren't merely physical, such as dress, but mental as well.

Such attributes come to be the way the entire spectrum of the group is defined, whether or not the individual people subscribe to the stereotype.

Just a few years after being assigned a label which needs no mention, the thinking and dress of our generation has caught on in popular culture. Trapped between an odd aftermath of the 1980s and the already-fading grunge and coffee-shop culture, the calling cards given to us by popular society are well-known.

The negative points are also well known; from the "Clueless" mall rats and their vernacular to the kid in the Sheik condom ad decked out in fading fashion, we are seen on the levels we were raised under during the '80s. These characteristics appear simplified because of their roots in the fast-paced barrage of Saturday morning cartoons and the quick clips of MTV. However, this is the medium of which I feel our generation can draw its strengths.

When I say this, I immediately set aside all physical posturings relating to clothing and such; everyone is well acquainted with the phrase, "you can't judge a book by its cover." I hope that what will define our young culture in the end will be the artistic products we create, because when all is said and done, that is what defines a culture.

After all, we don't remember the baby boomers from their politics or historical events so much as we recall television shows such as "The Honeymooners" and Bob Newhart's escapades as a psychiatrist. History books might say one thing, but our memories dictate another set of facts, many of them being visually oriented.

Myview

The future doesn't lie in repeating the past verbatim, although the past is where truths exist. The future relates to taking art forms and transposing them into the medias we are accustomed to. Such a task begins, as so many things do, with education. The humanities are aptly named, because they bookmark the setting society resided in. Many of those art forms are relative and can be used to express thoughts and feelings in the pre-

The traditional content of art is more constant than any traditional value, because we all feel the same emotions. Artistic individuals should press their creations into current medias which prevail over popular society. The World Wide Web is one such instrument: Anyone can create a home page and fill it with what they wish to display. This is an excellent way to publicize one's artistic, literary or philosophic endeavors.

We are trained by television to Wild take in a vast amount of nearly meaningless material. Despite a few quality shows presently being aired, there is little to truly appreciate. However, just because a set of images contains little material doesn't mean that is the only way to utilize the vehicle of television. Programs documenting cultures or ideas have the potential to educate, if only the format is changed.

We exist in a duality where we try to represent ourselves and end up being taken as spokesmen for the entire group.

This is a very natural thing. People who work within the humanities do a great thing when they represent themselves, because that message of independence speaks more clearly than when one person represents the collective.

Words are powerful tools

I will be receiving my doctorate in psychology this summer, having begun my education as a journalism major and newspaper editor in the late 1970s. I've spent more than 10 years in academic effort.

One of the things I draw from my journalism background is my value of freedom of speech. I am a dogged defender of the First Amendment above most anything else.

During my years of studying psychology, however, I became interested in how language affects, influences and persuades people. Language is powerful, but meaning is ambiguous.

By this, I mean that a word or phrase means one thing to the speaker but may hold a completely different meaning to the listener. When the meanings are completely different for speaker and listener, the problem can be cleared up quickly, because it is generally evident. When the difference in meaning is a subtle one, it is likely both parties believe they have communicated, and both are fooled.

The proverbial example is a good one, in which he says, "I love you," and it means, "I love to make love to you." She hears, "I love you," and it means, "I want to be with you forever." Both parties have heard the same words, but the meanings are assigned by what goes into their individual thought processes.

Through my research, I have come to believe the media influence behavior; visual depictions normalize images and ideas, until we see them without really thinking much about it. This is especially true about violent depictions - on this, the research is are contemplating, or have attempted, suicide. They are not strange, crazy or to be avoided. The idea of self-murder as a possibility was passed on to them no doubt under the most innocent of circumstances - through comments by a friend or in a newspaper article, movie or book that described the thoughts of a fictional character.

Once taken in as a possibility, every time this individual heard of or read about a suicide (whether real or fictional), it reinforced the possibility that killing oneself would provide a way to gain a desired goal or simply to be rid of life's pain.

We cannot take it lightly that our minds pick up these possibilities, because this is, after all, how we develop the underlying ideas that it is possible to become an astronaut, president, firefighter or lion tamer - we have heard of it happening for someone else.

We all must take personal responsibility for what happens to us in life. I am not suggesting the campaign has caused anyone to consider suicide or homicide (as one headline read, "Shoot your family, shoot your friends, shoot your co-workers"). That would be ridiculous.

But words become part of our individual mindscape and our collective vocabulary of experience. What we see and what we talk about become with repetition normal, reasonable and then possible.

As a fierce and unwavering defendant of free speech, then, I find myself in a tough position - that of advocating for extreme care in the use of these powerful tools, our words.

STEWART DESERVES COLUMNIST PRAISE

We are writing in response to Ryan Burr's reply to Chris May's column in the Readers Write section of the Feb. 20 Collegian. We emphatically agree with Chris May's decision to crown Norm Stewart the king of all Big 8 coaches.

Burr said in his response that Stewart "has not accomplished as much as Roy Williams has," and that Stewart is a very "questionable" choice as the best coach in Big 8 history.

Saying that Stewart hasn't accomplished anything is pure idiocy. Stewart has done nothing but benefit the Big 8 in his 30 years as coach of the University of Missouri Tigers.

Just because some of us are die-hard, "bleeding purple" Wildcat fans doesn't give us the right to discredit a man who has done so much for the Big 8 Conference and the sport of college basketball. If anything, we should take pride in the fact that he is part of our great conference and respect him for who he is and what he has done.

As you will see, he has done some remarkable things:

Stewart was a two-time player of the year in the Big 8 for Missouri.

Stewart has coached and won in the Big 8 in four different decades, proving him consistent and capable of producing a winning organization time after time again.

■ Stewart is a two-time NCAA national coach of the year.

■ There are only two other active coaches in the nation who have more all-time victories than Stewart (and both have coached longer).

Stewart has more victories than Indiana's Bobby Knight. Doesn't everybody agree Knight is a fantastic coach?

■ Stewart has been awarded Big 8 Coach of the Year 12 times (almost one every other year), including four in a row from 1976-80. No other coach in history has achieved that standard.

Perhaps Stewart's most respectable accomplishment was his victory over a colon cancer that started in 1989 and threatened his life. After sitting out the rest of that season in the hospital, Stewart resumed coaching in fall 1990 against his doctor's requests. Not only did he continue to overcome cancer, he continued to fight and win. Stormin' Norman has collected an average of 22 wins per year in the seven seasons since his bout with can-

Williams. Williams is a class act, and in our mind, the best coach in the Big 8 right now. But will he be in 10 years? This award was for the best coach in Big 8 history, and if you asked Williams, I think you'd find his answer would be Missouri's Norm Stewart.

The Texas A&M tournament was captured by the host Aggies, who shot 932 as a team, an amazing 25 strokes ahead of second-place Southern Methodist University, which hails from Dallas.

"Being a collegiate team, you have to put on one race a year," Marshall said.

Starting a cycling team is a little more difficult than just putting on a race, however. It takes someone who has been in the cycling circles for a few years. Marshall fits the bill, having competed in cycling for nine years. "I've been in the sport so long that I know the right people,"

Marshall said. "It's not hard to find sponsors.' Sponsors are important in cycling, where the costs can add up

The cycling team is open to anyone. The only requirement is the possession of a racing license for rating purposes. In road racing, racers are placed in categories between one and five, with one being the most competitive. In mountain bike racing, racers are ranked from A to D, with A being the most competitive. Road races are longer, more generally between 30 and 100 miles, and requires more training. For that reason, there is more interest at K-State in mountain bike racing, which involves races no longer than 40 miles, Marshall said. While road races are high-speed, long-distance races, mountain-bike racing involves racing with Kansas. The two schools will race, and a schedule of 30 races around more obstacles, such as trees, Marshall said.

> "(Mountain-bike races) are a lot shorter but really hard because of the rough terrain and the steep climbs," Marshall said. "Road racing is a lot more fast-paced, while mountain bike racing is more technical, such as weaving through

> And don't worry about a lack of experience if you're looking at racing for the first time. Many of the people, while familiar with cycling, have never raced before, Marshall

> "A lot of people in mountain biking are new to the sport, so they'll learn something new every time they race," Marshall said. "I've been racing nine years, and I still learn something new every time I race."

Just because the cycling team is new to campus does not mean Marshall cannot start that longtime college tradition - recruiting.

"I just talked to a kid who might be coming to school here next year in engineering, and he's real strong on the bike," Marshall said.

Even without much opportunity to recruit cyclists; Marshall said he thinks the team will be competitive in its inaugural season, with at least two people, including himself, slated to compete in nationals.

"I think we're going to fare very well," Marshall said. "There's three or four of us who are high up in the

"We're especially looking for girls," Marshall said. "We only have one girl on the team right now. (But) she's an incredible athlete.

For cyclists who don't want to race competitively, group rides will be held one or two times each week, Marshall said.

Information on joining the cycling team is available by contacting Marshall at 776-8614.

Athletics bring Big 8 recognition, prestige

Sometimes, the most telling statements can come from the most unlikely places.

Shortly before transferring to K-State this semester, I was discussing colleges with a server in a suburban Denver restaurant when the conversation turned to my pending transfer.

The response of the server, who was a University of Colorado graduate, was swift. "That's a good move," she said. "You want to stay with a Big 8 school for name recognition."

A similar thing happened a few days later at a high school basketball game. I was discussing colleges with one of the parents in attendance when she commented that the main advantage of K-State over Colorado State was the former's membership in the Big 8, while Colorado State was in the lower-profile Western Athletic Conference.

The moral of the story is the importance that bigtime athletics, and specifically the affiliation of a bigtime conference, plays in the overall role of the university. When President Jon Wefald alluded to the importance of a Big 8 affiliation a few weeks back, students and professors alike seemed to be shocked. What importance, they asked, could a Big 8 Conference affiliation have in the educational role of a university? Plenty. Name recognition is a big reason why anyone chooses a university. That is why you see more out-ofstate students at big universities, such as K-State or Kansas, than at smaller schools. Contrary to popular belief, most small business owners, and many executives at large businesses, do not know everything about low-profile colleges and rely on what they see in the media for impressions of colleges.

With a few exceptions such as the Harvards and the Yales, name recognition for colleges comes from athletics. The best way for K-State to get its name out in newspapers on either of the coasts, or in neighboring states for that matter, is through athletics. Not to take away from other extracurricular activities, but winning debate championships will not make the newspapers in Los Angeles or New York. A bowl vic-

Name recognition is certainly an important part of college. In reality, a large number of people at K-State would not be here if they did not think a degree would help them in their careers at some point. And name recognition from the college they attended is undeniably a big part of that degree helping at some point.

A prime example of name recognition came in a letter to the editor that ran in this publication. A student wrote about graduating from Southwest Missouri State University, a low-profile school in Springfield. The student said the institution was considered solid enough for him to be accepted to a master's program at K-State, and he was judged on the basis of his academic accomplishments, not the school's football team.

I'm sure he was judged based on his academic accomplishments when he was applying to K-State, and I hope he is when it comes time to look for a job. But if you have a degree from Southwest Missouri State, do not expect people outside the immediate region (Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri) to recognize the name. As a Denver resident, I had not heard of Southwest Missouri State prior to reading his letter. I have been familiar, however, with K-State and the Big 8 schools for several years before deciding to enroll

I am not saying the educational level at Southwest Missouri State or any other small university or college cannot compete with a larger school such as K-State. I am saying, however, that there is a difference in name recognition

In my personal situation, with long-term goals to be a sportswriter or be otherwise involved in the sports industry, a strong conference affiliation was a prerequisite for any school I looked at attending. I started my education at Metropolitan State College of Denver, a Division II school, but soon realized neither the name recognition nor the opportunities as a sportswriter existed.

I realize my situation is somewhat unique, but I also believe other people came to K-State for the residual effects of the athletic program, whether it is band, cheerleading or anything else.

But a strong athletic department does more than provide a name for the University. It is an excellent form of entertainment and a break from classes. If K-State were not in the Big 8, the only Sunflower Showdown the Wildcats would compete in might be against Emporia State or Wichita State.

In other words, athletics add to the quality of life on campus as well as the Manhattan community. An event like last weekend's basketball game against Kansas is something a town the size of Manhattan would never experience if there were no big college sports teams in town.

I realize that there are many people on the K-State campus who were thrilled to hear there would be no student ticket prices, which could jeopardize student attendance at athletic events.

K-State attempts to sweep Cyclones

It was always supposed to be a good game, but it was supposed to be between the two last-place teams in the Big 8.

Instead, it has become a battle between the second and fourth-place teams in the league

Tonight, fourth-ranked K-State travels to second-place Iowa State.

The Cyclones are ranked No. 23 in the Associated Press poll.

The Wildcats went 1-1 last week. The Cats defeated Missouri, 69-64, and lost to Kansas, 66-77. K-State stands at 6-6 in conference play and 15-9 overall.

The Cyclones are coming off a win against the Tigers in Columbia where it slid past Missouri, 78-74. Earlier in the week, the Cyclones lost at Oklahoma State, 46-58.

The last time K-State lost to the Jayhawks, it lost its next two games-an overtime loss at home to Colorado and a drubbing at Oklahoma State.

The Cats are trying not to let that happen again. "We need to prepare differ-

KU's Jacque Vaughn does his best to keep K-State's Elliot Hatcher away from the ball during Saturday's basketball game in Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats are in Ames, Iowa, tonight to face No. 23 Iowa State.

Davis thinks the Cats have a good shot to beat the Cyclones this time.

"I really think we can beat them if we come out ready to play," Davis said.

Davis said the key to beating the Cyclones was for the Cats to practice hard and put the loss to Kansas behind

With only two games left for the Cats in regular season play, the focus is turning to the NCAA Tournament.

"We need to win at least one more game," Asbury said. "We have to get a win here." Senior guard Elliot Hatcher said his hopes are still alive for a NCAA Tournament "This is a must-win situation to give us a good shot at the tournament," Hatcher said. "We still have hope."

The Cyclones have a different incentive for winning. If the Cyclones win their last two regular season games, which are K-State and Colorado, both at home, the team will have its all-time best record in the Big 8, 10-4.

The Cats have one game left after Iowa State when they take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers in Lincoln on

B-tribe has saturated its second album, "Suave Suave," with a seductive, pulsating intensity.

Using a heavy dance beat in a flamenco setting, this band moves a step further with the guest vocals of Brazilian singer/songwriter Deborah Blando. Her voice, somehow reminiscent of both Tori Amos and Madonna, gives added texture and depth to the music.

The album's strongest drawing factor is its use of string interludes throughout the pieces. This use of instrumentation creates a more unique and much softer sound to the music, which is mostly dominated by dance mixes and the Spanish guitar.

The result is a collection of work which minutely resembles Enigma, Deep Forest and Dead Can Dance. A couple of pieces, such as track five,

"Hablando," contain synthesizer work that has touches of Vangelis. If categorized, the sound would fall somewhere in the range between new age and dance (albeit slow dance).

Although at times the tracks seem to carry on a bit too long, "Suave Suave" possesses several pieces worth listening to with a third ear.

The title track, "Suave Suave," has a nice, slow climactic build, sustained progression and gradual resolution. The string arias and keyboard movements are simple, soothing and gorgeous.

One of the longer pieces on the album, "Hablando," drips with tragedy. Blando virtually croons in this song. Her voice is mournfully husky in this piece, providing an exquisite complement to the music's tone

"Albatross," track seven, is another piece in excess of seven minutes. It has an almost primitive beat but manages to invoke a rather futuristic tone. The synthesizer once again seems inspired by Vangelis, and the string work adds some warmth to this spaceage song. The song is good for a couple of minutes, but the band extended the voyage through space just a little too long.

Track 10, "Poesia," begins almost immediately with a cello, followed soon after by the main keyboard theme that is carried throughout the piece.

This theme closely resembles the underlying theme in two songs performed by Erik Satie and Faure on their 1978 release, "The French Touch." It has a hazy, dream-like quality with a wonderfully pacifying effect.

The final track on the album, "Nanita," is a Spanish lullaby performed in Spanish. (Earlier on the compact disc, it is performed in English.) It is sedate and achingly soft. Blando gives a superb performance, and the song gently eases the listener out of the album.

Despite the lengthiness of many of the tracks, the CD contains enough good material to warrant at least borrowing it from a friend on those hardto-relax nights.

"It's good sleep music," Dan Merson, senior in psychology, said. In "Suave Suave," B-tribe has arranged an album that as a whole is a spiritual refreshment. expires 3-18-96

Country DJ has diverse tastes

■ 21-year-old DJ informs and entertains B-104.7 listeners

People tell him they thought he'd be bigger, fatter and bald in real life. Brady Goodman is a disc jockey for the country radio station KXBZ-FM 104.7.

"Some days it's kind of tough playing country. I try not to make it depressing. I'm an open-minded person. That's why I think people listen to me," Goodman said.

Although B-104.7 is located in the same building as KMKF-FM 101.5 and KMAN-AM 1350, it is definitely a separate station. It even has different owners.

Because it is a new station, B-104.7 also has new equipment.

"Everything is digital. All of the music is on hard drive. The computer does it all. I do my talk and personality," Goodman said.

This is the fifth station Goodman has worked for as a DJ.

"This is the best station I've worked for as far as letting me do what I want," Goodman said. "I have lots and lots of free reign."

His job consists of running the computer, taking calls and announcing upcoming events.

"Overall I can pretty much do what I want. My job is to inform and entertain," Goodman said.

Goodman started working as a DJ when he was 18 at a community college in Colby, where he worked at the campus station.

"I started out doing top 40. I've done urban and top-40 stations," Goodman said.

In college, Goodman started listening to country music.

"When I was a freshman in college, my high school sweetheart dumped me and I started drinking. Country just comes along," Goodman said.

After three semesters at the community college in Colby, Goodman left college to be a DJ full time.

"I'm very happy being 21 and doing afternoons. I'd love to be Howard Stern," Goodman said. Silverado Saloon, 531 N. Manhattan Ave., also hires Goodman

as a DJ on the weekends.
"For up and coming country artists, the country scene is doing very, very well," Goodman said.

Although he works at a country station, Goodman said his music interests extend beyond country to include artists like Candlebox, Bush and Dr. Dre.

and Dr. Dre.
"I don't think anyone would stereotype me as a country, country, country guy," Goodman said.

Radio is not the only career for Goodman. He said he would like to explore other areas of entertainment besides radio.

"I don't want to be here when I'm 23. I'd like to be something more. I think I'd really like to be in movies and television. I'm in radio because I didn't want to fail. I didn't want to be pushing a shopping cart down west L.A.," Goodman said.

Goodman watches Howard Stern, and he has read both of Howard Stern's books.

"He started out just like I did. Whether you like him or not, he has succeeded," Goodman said.

The phones ring for Goodman several times a day when he is on the air. He exchanges witty banter with his listeners.

"I think I'm more confident on the air. When I'm out somewhere, I'm not as apt to talk to people. I'm very shy," Goodman said.

Goodman said he would love to be friends with all his listeners.

"The more friends the better. I get embarrassed because I don't remember everyone," Goodman said.

► K-STATE ATHLETICS

Stadium to install screens

Trevor Grimm

When it comes to college football scoreboard technology, K-State should be in a class by itself beginning with the 1996 season.

Well, almost.

If all goes according to plan, by the beginning of July, KSU Stadium will become the second college-only football stadium in the nation to feature a large-screen television.

The construction of a Sony JumboTron, two in-stadium message boards and an outside marquee at KSU Stadium should begin sometime after May 1 and be finished by July 1, according to associate athletic director Matt McMillen.

The only other college team with a large TV screen that does not share a stadium with a professional team is Nebraska, which has two Mitsubishi DiamondVision screens, McMillen

McMillen said the K-State project enough sponsorship cannot be found to cover the $2.5 million cost of the project, it will not go ahead.

"It's going extremely well," he said. "Of course, if we don't get advertisers for funding, we won't do the project."

The main portion of the project will be the 16 feet, 6 inches by 22 feet Sony JumboTron, which will be located on the north side of the stadium on the back of the football offices. The board will have the potential to be used for instant replays, excerpts from the coach's show, highlights from previous seasons along with features on athletes, colleges and other K-State sports, McMillen said.

The score and time remaining will be located below the JumboTron, while two permanent, backlit advertisements will be located above the screen. Flanking the JumboTron will be two advertisements on each side, one of which will be backlit while the will be funded entirely by sponsors. If other will be a tri-vision, meaning three ads will rotate throughout the

> "We want to act like a top-10 program, and we thought if we could secure the advertising, we'd go this route," McMillen said.

The two message boards will be located above the seating area in the southeast and southwest corners of the stadium. In addition to standard football statistics such as down, yards to go, quarter, time remaining and score, the boards will feature an electronic message center. The message center can be used for tracking statistics, outof-town scores or graphics after a big play, McMillen said.

The marquee, which will be located outside the stadium, will feature a 15 feet by 3 feet, 6 inch message display as well as a 15 feet by 4 feet, 6 inchitri-vision ad panel. Original plans called for the marquee to be located at the corner of College and Kimball avenues, but a location has not been finalized, McMillen said.

Advertising revenue from the boards can be put toward other stadium improvements, such as new restrooms, new concession areas, halfsteps in the seating area and eventually recovering the seats, according to McMillen.

"I think we've done a lot of improvements to the facility," McMillen said. "(Athletic director) Max (Urick) is real intent on improving the atmosphere for the fans.' Increasing competition for the entertainment dollar means more extras, such as the scoreboards, are needed to keep the fans coming, McMillen said.

"Athletics has become competition in entertainment with movies and proevents. We have to make sure that when people spend their discretionary income, they have a great time. If someone comes to the game and has a great time, they're more likely to come back," he said.

KSU Stadium to get JumboTron

Studies show that scoreboards are a large part of a fan's experience at a game. According to a research project by the Ohio State University chapter of the American Marketing Association, fans look at the scoreboard after almost every play. The survey found that male fans at Ohio

Stadium looked at the scoreboard an average of 44 times per quarter, while female fans looked an average time of 29 times per quarter.

"With the JumboTron, I would guess (those numbers) would probably double in most cases (at KSU Stadium)," McMillen said.

FORT RILEY

Off-campus classes fulfill requirements

AbdullNaser T. Abdullah

Dropping a class this far into the semester is a tough decision many students face, but the Division of Continuing Education offers more than 40 classes at Fort Riley that could help solve the problem.

Enrollment for term three, which begins March 4, began Monday. Classes are offered Monday through Friday.

"Most of the time it's the basic requirement classes, but they do offer some higherlevel classes," Roberta Hodges, Academic Services Office manager, said.

A class schedule can be obtained at 131 College Court Building.

There is a program for an associate's degree offered at Fort Riley, Hodges said. Full-time students at K-State who have paid full fees are eligible for a fee waiver when they enroll in Fort Riley classes, said Joan Colahan, office assistant at the Division of Continuing Education.

Only the classes offered through the University have a fee waiver is offered, Hodges said. Many oncampus students enroll at Fort Riley.

"A lot of the students take the courses out of Fort Riley because they have problems fitting them into their schedule here on-campus, or because the class was closed," Hodges said.

Fort Riley classes offer students choices with time and variety of classes, offering courses such as expository writing and public speaking. "Classes at Fort Riley bailed me out a few times," Maysan Al-Maskati, junior in industrial engineering, said. "I dropped a few classes at K-State and took them again in Fort Riley as they offered the classes at times I was able to make," Al-Maskati said.

The advantage of taking classes at Fort Riley is that one can go through two Fort Riley terms during one regular semester at K-State, Al-Maskati said. Fort Riley terms are less than two months long.

GRAVES URGES KANSANS TO ADHERE TO STATE WIDE BURNING REGULATIONS

Gov. Bill Graves urged Kansans Monday to think twice before violating the statewide burning ban issued Feb. 23 in response to two fires that occurred over the weekend.

Graves' urgency is in response to the 39 percent of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area and the 640 acres of open prairie in Riley County that burned Sunday.

It was also in response to a grass fire in northeast Kansas that forced a temporary evacuation of Auburn Saturday.

Local authorities believe both fires were started by human means, which was in violation of the ban. "This is serious business," Graves said. "As long as these current conditions exist, it is incumbent upon every Kansan to be aware of the potential danger." According to a press release from Graves' office, the State of Emergency Proclamation signed by Graves prohibits all citizens and visitors of Kansas from doing these things:

■ Careless use of smoking materials, including cigarettes, cigars and smoking pipes. Discard shall be in a manner to preclude threat from smoldering remains.

Building, maintaining, attending or using any open fire or campfire except in permanent stoves, fireplaces or barbecue grills in developed recreation sites or residential lawns.

Prescribed burning of all fence rows, fields, wild lands. ravines, trash and debris. Prescribed burning may be exempted from this order if such burning is necessary for crop survival and has been specifically approved in writing by the fire chief in a jurisdiction where the burning is to take place.

Violators of the ban could face up to one year in the county jail and/or a fine up to $25,000.

CITY COMMISSION

City requests public transportation proposals

Chris Oakley

Students who are sick of looking for parking spots on campus or who want to save gas may be getting help from the city of Manhattan. A request for proposals concerning public transportation has been finalized, city manager Gary Greer said. The request asks individuals or groups who are interested in some type of public transportation system to submit proposals or ideas. Greer said the request is to gather facts and consider ideas. The city would look at proposals to find if there is a need for public transportation.

"A request for proposals means that we are going in with no preconceived notions," Greer said. "It could be a group from Russia that wants to use mopeds."

Greer said he envisions students and employees at K-State and people from Fort Riley would be groups interested in using public transportation.

Public transportation for the aging and handicapped and limited transportation is currently available in Manhattan through the Riley County Aging Transportation Agency. Greer said the city didn't want to end that service.

"We want to enhance transportation services, not destroy them," he said. City commissioner Justin Kastner said by bringing the groups interested together, a plan could be formed.

"What we need to do is bring them together and form a comprehensive plan that would most likely not involve only one entity," Kastner said.

Kastner said he thinks some people could find public transportation helpful.

"I think there's different segments of the population that need a public transportation system," he said.

At a Jan. 23 work session, city commissioners heard a proposal from John Furney, president of Travelers Express, and Robert Henderson, managing partner of Yellow Cab Company, to provide a public transportation system.

Furney and Henderson proposed a system that would include four 1994 Metro Trans conversion vehicles, which could transport up to two 10 passengers and two wheelchair passengers.

Furney presented commissioners possible routes, which would include stops at Manhattan Town Center and Westloop Shopping Center. He said the initial plan included operating from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Furney said the cost to use the system would be $1 per day per person.

Chad Liebl, senior in agribusiness, can't drive because of a medical problem. He said he would use a transportation system to get around in Manhattan.

"A shuttle system would be a good idea, because it would solve part of the parking problem and would be conve-

Passage on a vote of 39-0 following a non-debate on Monday when senators listened to an explanation but attempted no amendments and offered no

The bill went to the House, which approved a proposed regents system budget in another bill last week. There are no important differences between the two versions The bill would appropriate nearly $1.2 billion for the Kansas Board of Regents and its institutions for the fiscal year that begins on July 1.

It also changes budgeting for the three largest universities, giving their officials more control over fiscal policy.

If the bill became law, the state would increase spending on its universities by only 0.6

However, legislators are putting together a state budget that likely will include a small decrease in overall government spending. The regents system has the third-largest budget in state government, behind the Board of Education and the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. Together, the campuses have more than 17,800 employees.

The Senate's version of the regents' budget contains about $8.4 million less in spending than Gov. Bill Graves proposed. The bulk of the decrease, $7.2 million, represented money for salary increases. The Senate budget committee stripped the money out, because it plans to deal with the issue of pay increases later.

However, the Senate did remove about $101,000 for new employees for new buildings on several campuses.

The House endorsed Graves' budget proposals for the regents system.

JUST IN CASE CNN DOESN'T REHIRE HIM...

Pat Buchanan's chances of getting the Republican nomination for president are slim, by most accounts. Why, even if he were to gain the nomination and take on President Clinton, the battle would be rhetorically bloody, but Buchanan would probably turn out the loser. So Smatterings has been working to come up with alternative occupations for Buchanan. Here are some ideas:

Border patrol guard. Buchanan wants to stop illegal immigration. By putting him on border patrol in the southwest, he'd finally get a chance to deal with those Mexicans he's so worried about. Mark Fuhrman, now retired, could do the training.

Director of Quality Control, Clorox Corporation. After failing to pour cultural bleach on America, Buchanan would work hard to make sure everyone's clothing is as white as possible. Sheets especially. Traveling executioner. Most of us would have a hard time pulling that switch on the wall or dropping those make him perfect for the job.

David Duke's public relations consultant. The former Ku Klux Klan leader is running for office again (Duke, not Buchanan), this time for the position of Louisiana senator. If Buchanan fails to get the GOP nomination, he could at least help Duke join the Good Old (White) Boys Club called the Senate.

LET THAT WOMAN BOOGIE-WOOGIE

An Alabama woman was arrested and fined for disturbing the peace recently. On the first anniversary of her husband's death, Stella Jackson went to the site of his grave and danced on it while shouting about how glad she was that he was dead. She was hauled into court, where she told the magistrate she just could not contain her joy about his demise. She was fined $750. An investigation is in order to determine whether she behaves even more outrageously when she receives survivor's benefits in the form of a check from the Social Security Administration on the first of every month. She's happy he's dead, but she's probably happier to be his beneficiary.

Bombing victim to be exhumed

QUICKread ► A U.S. district judge will not let members of the defense to be present when the government exhumes the body of an Oklahoma bombing victim.

OKLAHOMA CITY - The judge in the Oklahoma bombing case refused to order prosecutors to allow the defense to be present when the body of one of the victims is exhumed.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch considered the request at the start of a two-day pre-trial hearing for defendants Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols. The hearing deals with 12 challenges to the federal murder and conspiracy indictment against the

Before moving on to the indictment challenges, defense attorneys asked to be present during the exhumation.

Lakesha Levy's body is to be exhumed in New Orleans, because investigators believe she was buried with a severed leg that belongs to someone else.

A separate leg now determined to be Mrs. Levy's has been the subject of months of investigation by the state medical exam-

Defense attorneys wanted to be present during the exhumation to monitor government investigators.

"We don't trust them, and we want to be present," said Stephen Jones, the head of McVeigh's defense team.

Prosecutors said Mrs. Levy's family does not want the defense present.

"The family has a right to privacy in this rather solemn and unusual procedure. The defense has no right to be there," said special Assistant U.S. Attorney Beth Wilkin-

Matsch would not order the government to allow the defense in, but urged both sides to reach an agreement so that proper tests can

After the leg issue was considered,

Nichols attorney Michael Tigar began motions challenging the indictment on procedural grounds. Tigar maintains that the antiterrorism statute McVeigh and Nichols are charged with does not contain a sufficient intent requirement to carry the death penal-

The defense also maintains that the indictments should be dismissed because of prosecutorial misconduct and violations of grand jury secrecy

A grand juror, Hoppy Heidelberg, talked to a reporter from "Media Bypass," a publication with ties to right-wing militias, after becoming dissatisfied with prosecutors' failure to show the grand jury evidence of a larger conspiracy, especially the mysterious John Doe No. 2.

John Doe No. 2 was the dark-haired suspect depicted in FBI sketches released after the April 19 bombing. A nationwide manhunt failed to find the suspect. Federal officials later said that an innocent Army private resembled the sketches, but they were never withdrawn.

"The grand jurors, or at least some of them, were convinced that there was a larger conspiracy and particularly sought to elicit from the government further information on John Doe No. 2. The grand jurors specifically wanted to meet the artist who drew the composites of the two suspects to question him concerning his drawings, but this request was refused," McVeigh attorney Stephen Jones wrote in the motion filed Oct. 13.

The indictment accuses McVeigh and Nichols of acting with "others unknown" to plot the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which killed 169 people and injured more than 500. Both men could face the death penalty if convicted.

Heidelberg was dismissed from the grand jury. However, prosecutors maintain his conversations with "Media Bypass" are irrelevant to the indictment of McVeigh and Nichols because Heidelberg admits that he voted to indict.

Although a grand jury can vote to hear any evidence it deems relevant, prosecutors usually control proceedings, showing the panels only a summary of the government's evidence.

Matsch is scheduled to hear legal arguments on the issue, but not evidence. If he decides the legal arguments have merit, he could order an evidentiary hearing. Nichols and McVeigh are each charged with three counts under a federal anti-terrorism law that prohibits using a weapon of mass destruction.

They also face eight federal murder charges for the deaths of eight federal law enforcement agents slain in the blast.

McVeigh's defense team filed five motions of its own and adopted all of Tigar's

"The government is trying to make an end run around the Fifth Amendment grand jury indictment process and Timothy McVeigh's Sixth Amendment right to be informed of the charges against him by polluting ... the indictment with what are essentially at least nine sub-counts of property crimes," McVeigh attorney Robert Wyatt wrote in a supporting motion.

One legal expert has speculated that the motions would probably not create any serious obstacles for the prosecution.

"Their strategy here is to nitpick this thing," David Clark, a professor at the University of Tulsa College of Law, said when the motions were filed Sept. 29.

"The worst that could happen is that they'd have to file a new indictment. It's not going to stop anything.'

SPACE PROGRAM

NASA talks to satellite; retrieval still impossible

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -The plot thickened Tuesday: NASA managed to communicate with the escaped satellite-on-a-cord and discovered it had a dead computer and an empty gas tank.

"There has been an event on the satellite that we do not understand yet," Mission Control told the astronauts aboard space shuttle Columbia.

NASA officials said they were uncertain whether the satellite problems were connected to Sunday night's break in the 12-mile cord.

All data indicated the satellite was fine when it broke loose from Columbia and for at least 30 minutes afterward. Stray voltage or circuitry trouble may have caused the satellite systems to malfunction, NASA said.

"It's a very interesting puzzle," said NASA's Anthony Lavoie, chief engineer for the satellite. "We don't have all the answers right now."

Engineers at Johnson Space Center in Houston sent radio commands to the satellite as it soared overhead, hoping to find clues as to what caused the copper, nylon and Teflon cord to snap without warning.

NASA was surprised to find that one of the main computers and a gyroscope were not working and that valves on both nitrogen-gas thrusters were open. All 100 pounds of gas had spewed out.

Controllers later managed to turn on that gyroscope and closed all thruster valves on the wobbly craft, which was dragging 12.2 miles of cord. They also activated all four science instruments on the satellite to monitor surrounding electrical and magnetic fields as well as the motion of the satellite and the tether. The fact that it is working at all is extraordinary despite all that it is been through, astronaut Jeffrey Hoff-

The half-ton satellite - the heart of what was a $400 million-plus experiment to generate electricity in orbit - has enough battery power to allow communication for another one or two days.

After that, it will be an expensive piece of space junk. NASA said it is too perilous to send the shuttle after the satellite - its dangling cord could wrap itself around the spaceship, endangering the seven astro-

Since the accident, NASA officials have refused to speculate on the cause of the tether break, despite astronauts' observation that the frayed end of the cord remaining on Columbia looked charred and melt-

But some scientists said the 3,500 volts of electricity being generated by the Italian satellite could have caused a spark or discharge, which

"In general, what we concluded was the modification to the lower speed limit did not correspond with a lower prevailing speed," Petty said.

He said after the reduction in the limit, police increased patrol of the area. One ticket has been issued in the neighborhood since the reduction, Petty said.

"Short of a policeman sitting there with a radar gun in a marked car, that sign doesn't slow speeds," Petty said.

Petty said under the old limit, there was an average of four accidents per year in the neighborhood. Since the new limit was enacted last year, there has been four accidents. Petty said the neighborhood is comparable in the structure of roads and visibility with other neighborhoods built in the same time. He said because of the two fatal accidents in 1993, residents became concerned with the safety of the Petty said there are other possibilities other than lowering the speed limit to control how fast motorists drive in the area.

One possibility is to implement traffic calmers. Traffic calmers create a nuisance, such as an island in the middle of what would previously have been a straight road, forcing motorists to slow down to take the

"They cost money; I'll be the first to admit that," Petty said. City manager Gary Greer said because the decreased speed limit didn't slow motorists, the city should look at different methods.

"Changing the signs, at least in my experience, has never slowed traffic down," Greer said. "Maybe we ought to look at things which do slow people down, because signs don't do it."

Petty said the traffic calmers are being tested. He said they work best when the are used for a specific problem, such as in Stagg Hill.

The city began using a Smart Trailer device in the neighborhood. The device detects the speed of motorists and then displays it so they are reminded of how fast they are going, Greer said.

Peterson said he wants to try to create an economic rewards system at

"With the current level fee, we can create an economic rewards system that provides incentive for quality. Our student health center is mediocre at best," he said.

Peterson said students want a user

He said he got this information by randomly surveying students during his campaign and when the fee was up for review.

"The idea of a totally optional fee was what students really liked. They wanted to have the option not to pay for it if they chose not to use the service," he said.

Peterson said health care is moving toward privatization and will be streamlined in coming years.

"I'm trying to make a small step toward making it less subsidized. By shifting it a little bit toward making it more privatized, you increase the quality and you increase the incentive." Peterson said.

Senators had the opportunity to override Peterson's decision with a two-thirds vote.

The veto was sustained with a rollcall vote of 31-22.

Many encouraged senators to work hard to create a new bill concerning

"We need to come up with a compromise that will pass, and it doesn't necessarily have to come from the dents," Peterson said.

Privilege Fee Committee," Mark Tomb, privilege fee chairman, said.

One senator pointed out how the meeting was a good example of how the legislative process works.

"Basically what happened tonight, just a minute ago, was good. It was a good example of how the process should work," Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said.

Due to the close vote of 31-22 on overriding the veto, Otto said there were still some who supported the fee increase.

"I will say, though, that we still had 31 votes, and I will make the bold assumption that there are still some people who want some type of fee increase, maybe not $14 or $15 like we had it the bill," Otto said.

Senators now have the task of creating a new bill for Lafene and starting the process over again. In other business, Senate approved allocations for eight different campus organizations.

The Black Student Union allocation was sent back to committee due to an amendment that may not have fallen under proper allocation guide-

During first readings, 10 new allocations were read and will be voted on next Tuesday.

Senators will travel to Salina for its March 7 meeting to tour K-State-Salina and meet with administrators.

In closing remarks, Peterson said he wanted to thank Senate for reconsidering the Lafene bill.

"I think that we can do better. I think this gives us an opportunity here to really do what's best for the stu-

Arizona supports Forbes in primary

Flat-tax champion Steve Forbes captured Arizona's winner-take-all primary Tuesday, shocking Pat Buchanan and Bob Dole to seize an improbable lead in the turbulent Republican presidential race.

Stung in the night's showdown contest, Dole took some solace in winning North and South Dakota.

For Forbes, the dramatic Arizona win meant back-to-back victories after disappointing fourth-place showings in Iowa and New Hampshire had his candidacy in jeopardy.

The publishing heir won Delaware's primary Saturday, and used that boost - and another major personal investment in TV ads - to surge past Buchanan and Dole in the final weekend of Arizona campaigning.

Forbes was ecstatic with his victo-

"We believe deeply that America has the potential for the greatest economic boom and spiritual renewal in its history," he told cheering supporters in Phoenix.

Buchanan could only be disappointed.

He drew enthusiastic crowds throughout the final weekend and asserted an Arizona win would make him the clear front-runner. Instead, he came away empty handed heading into Saturday's showdown in South

Dole flatly predicted a South Carolina victory, and the contest shapes up as his last best chance to launch a turnaround. Forbes trails way back in South Carolina, while Buchanan has been inching up.

Dole left no doubt he considered the more conservative Buchanan the bigger threat in the South.

With one-third of Arizona's vote tallied, lorbes was leading with 36 percent. Buchanan and Dole were battling for second; exit polling suggested Buchanan had the edge.

Lamar Alexander was a dim afterthought on the first multi-state primary day of the muddled GOP campaign, and some leading Dole supporters said it was time for the former Tennessee governor to get out of the way.

Tuesday's results put Forbes well ahead in the Associated Press delegate count, with 60 so far. Buchanan had 37 and Dole 36, while Alexander had 10 delegates.

A candidate needs 996 delegates to win the Republican nomination, and the success of the anti-establishment candidates sparked talk in Republican circles Tuesday of a contested conven-

Lavoie said it is unlikely the satellite could have caused the tether to break, even with all its problems.

The satellite trailed Columbia by thousands of miles Tuesday in an orbit nearly 50 miles higher. Columbia and its seven astronauts will pass within 70 miles of the satellite on Friday, eight days into their 14-day flight.

NASA expects the satellite to reenter the atmosphere and burn up in three to four weeks. Until then, the satellite and cord will be visible to the naked eve at times from the southernmost portions of the United States, Hoffman said.

"Obviously, we would have preferred people not get a chance to see this, but we have a satellite up there now with 20 kilometers of tether on it ... it should be an absolutely awesome sight," he said.

Upset in Ames

Aaron Swartzendruber (left), who hit five three-pointers to help lift K-State past No. 23 Iowa State Wednesday, is greeted by Ayome May after a play. K-State sets standard

Classrooms of the future in place at Umberger, Waters halls

Laurel Hovell

K-State has set a new standard for the classroom of the future.

Williams Auditorium Umberger Hall and Waters 328 have been remodeled and equipped with the latest in educational technology, including a Macintosh cross-platform computer, multi-media presentation software, Internet access and screen projection capabilities.

"The decision was made that there would be some common core capability in every classroom that we upgrade," said Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing

Additional classrooms scheduled for conversion before the end of summer, include Cardwell 102 and 103, Justin 109 and Willard 114.

If funds become available, Ackert 229 and Kedzie 106 will be converted as well, Unger said.

Private donors have provided the primary funding for the electronic classrooms, she said.

The construction bond, pending in the Kansas Legislature, will provide some funding for the remodeling of the classrooms.

That money cannot be used for technology, so we have to find other funds for the technology," Unger

Unger said many grants have been written and continue to be written for funds to purchase the technology.

One problem K-State faces is the continued funding of upgrades in equipment as it becomes outdated.

In addition to the common core technology, each classroom is designed and equipped to enhance its individual setting.

Williams Auditorium is a large lecture hall, so it has been equipped with a sound system and acoustically enhanced.

"We had acoustic engineers come in, and we rework that whole room acoustically. Then we put in speaker systems that would handle just anything," Unger said.

Water 328 is a smaller classroom that before remodeling was just a basic cramped room with 120 small wooden desks, all facing a blackboard at the front of the room, Unger said.

The remodeled room is a multilevel set of tables, arranged in a semicircle, with 75 movable, comfortable chairs. In this room, it is possible to see, hear and interact with each student from any position in the room.

"One of the things we wanted to be able to do in the classrooms was to move toward the new learning environments, where the students were more active in the learning process," Unger said.

These new classrooms are designed to give students a better learning environment.

Cattlemen's Day events start Friday

BIII Bontempo

With the increased price of cattle feed and decreased price of cattle, "Surviving the Cattle Cycle" will be the focus of the 83rd Annual Cattlemen's Day Friday at Brandeberry Sports

About 1,000 various cattle industry professionals, from feedlot operators to calf producers, will be at Brandeberry when Cattlemen's Day begins with trade show browsing. Throughout the day speakers will address the issues facing those in the cattle industry.

Jim Drouillard, associate professor of beef cattle nutrition at K-State, will discuss the use of alternative feedstuffs.

Drouillard said cattle traditionally feed on corn, milo, hay and silages, but beneficial alternatives are available to producers.

"Alternative feedstuffs ofttimes can be a bargain in terms of their nutritional value," he said.

Drouillard said some alternative feedstuffs are the byproducts of corn syrup or soy bean produc-

He said the goal of his presentation is to make livestock producers aware of the alternative feed-As the co-chairman of Cattlemen's Day,

Drouillard said he hopes to reach a larger audience. "We'd like to give a feeling for how we as a University are working for the average community,"

Drouillard said Cattlemen's Day gives people an opportunity to see how this is done as well as providing an understanding of what goes on in livestock production and the importance of livestock to Another topic of discussion this weekend will be

"We have five educational exhibits that all involve improving the quality of Kansas silage," said Keith Bolsen, professor of forage preservation and cattle nutrition.

Bolsen said silage is a way of preserving moist Silage is created when forages like corn and sorghum are preserved through the ensiling process. 'We make roughly three tons of silage every year in Kansas - we rely on it," Bolsen said.

Other topics include processing strategies for stressed calves, steam pasteurization of beef carcasses and opportunities for cutting production

Cattlemen's Day will also feature a beef industry update, research exhibits and demonstrations, a roast beef luncheon at 12:30 p.m. provided by the exhibitors and the annual special "K" bull and heifer sale at 4:30 p.m. The event is free of charge and open to the public.

ome Shack With Us" is the slogan Habitat for Humanity has been emphasizing this week to raise money to build another house. Micki Burns, senior in psychology, said Manhattan donated land to Habitat for Humanity's campus chapter to start building a house, which will be done by spring 1997.

"Our organization is trying to raise $35,000 by the spring of 1997 to provide housing for a Manhattan resident who is living in substandard housing," Burns said.

There is a table in front of the K-State Student Union where students, staff and faculty can receive more information on Habitat and put money in the plastic house toy bank

A Shack-A-Thon Vigil took place Monday night to begin the two days of shacking in front of the Union in concordance with Habitat for Humanity Week.

Habitat members slept in the leaky shack until noon Wednesday. At that time, the shack was demolished and a playhouse was built in its place. "Monday night was damn cold," Natasha Bettis, senior in architectural engineering, said. "I keeping the fee at $70. The student health fee has been debated since Feb. 4, when the Privilege Fee Committee recommended to increase the fee $20. "We've had a knock-down dragout here," Student Body President Jeff Peterson said. "It would be most beneficial to the student body to put it on a referendum."

At Tuesday night's Student Senate meeting, Peterson vetoed a $13.68 per semester increase in the student health fee. On Feb. 22, the increase passed Senate with a 42-11 vote. Despite the support for the bill Feb. 22, Senate failed to override Peterson's decision with the required . two-thirds vote, but instead voted 31-22.

Peterson said he ran on a campaign platform of financial accessibility.

"We have had one year without any student fee increases. We want to continue that trend," Peterson said. "Financial accessibility is our top priority. If a student can't afford to come to K-State, then really nothing else matters.'

The burden for the health center should be from user fees, he said.

But Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said the large increase in user fees needed to make up for the reduced budget would be a difficult adjustment without a reserve to fall back on.

"Given the current philosophy put forward by the SHAC (Student Health Advisory Committee) and the student survey, students pay more up-front and spread costs across the student body," he said. "Plus the fact $600,000 made up in student user fees is a lot."

Keeping the fee at $70 per semester would result in a $1.1-million budget reduction, Zweimiller

FACULTY SENATE

Faculty must sign contract for funding

Faculty members will be asked to sign a contract in March requiring them to report outside investments over $10,000 to the University.

Faculty who refuse to sign the contract will be ineligible to receive federal funding for research and permission for grants, John Havlin, president of Faculty Senate, said.

"The conflict of interest [policy] has to do with possible conflicts of financial interest between a faculty member, the University and companies that do business with the University," Gary Pierzynski, chair of Faculty Senate committee, said.

For example, if individuals are obtaining a research grant from a certain company or entity, they cannot have financial interest in that company if their actions could be influenced by financial gain, Pierzynski said.

According to the text of the policy, provided by the Kansas Board of Regents, the conflict of interest occurs when there is a divergence between the private, personal relationships. The policy is being implemented so there are no questions concerning a faculty member's professional actions, or decisions could be linked with personal benefit, gain or advantage

Some members of Senate said they are reluctant to sign this contract until it is simplified.

Ruth Dyer, member of Faculty Senate for the College of Engineering, said she thinks this policy is an invasion of privacy and is objecting to the policies because they are too broad.

"I think the wording of the policies are not clear, and when people sign them, they should know what they are signing," she said.

Havlin said he would like to see that no faculty has to sign the contract, but the federal funding stipulation leaves faculty members little choice in the matter. The contract for the policy is being revised, and it will be ready for the faculty to sign in early March, Haylin said.

"This form has not been finalized because the form's inconsistency with language and wordiness,"

Havlin said the actual form for the policy was suggested to the University by Fort Hays State University

"A small group of faculty, administration and a campus attorney got together to discuss problems with the form and what information would be acceptable in redrafting the form," Havlin said. "The first draft is being revised, and the second draft is going through the Faculty Affairs Committee now

A second provision in the bill, the conflict-oftime policy, prevents faculty and staff members from engaging in any extra-University activities that "exceed reasonable time limits or focus their primary professional responsibilities away from the institution." This policy passed Oct. 1, 1995, and is also being revised by the Faculty Affairs Committee. The conflict-of-time [policy] ensures faculty members' time is a commitment with the University whether it's a private consulting business or part owner in a company. Overall interest should be to the University, to your research and teaching," Pierzynski said

The Board of Regents advised K-State to develop a task force and come up with a conflict-of-interest and conflict-of-time policy for the University in 1995, he said. "The Board of Regents did this because of changes in federal regulations with regard to funding agencies, like the National Institute of Health and the National Science Foundation," Pierzynski

▶ K-STATE MUSIC PROFESSOR TO PERFORM TONIGHT

A suite from a rarely performed Handel opera will be among the selections presented by organist Robert Edwards, professor of music, during a recital at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel. Edwards has taught at K-State since 1972 and teaches piano and performance classes in the music department.

He will be performing along with mezzo soprano Jennifer Edwards, assistant professor of music, and trumpeter Craig Parker, associate professor of music, although the music on the program was primarily written for organ.

The suite from the Handel opera, "Rinaldo," is a piece that uses voice and trumpet in addition to organ, Edwards said.

"We have arranged the suite for solo trumpet, voice and organ," he said. "It includes battle music, military marches, an overture and two arias."

In the arrangement, he said the traditional orchestral part has been rewritten to be played on the organ.

Part of the reason the piece was chosen was its contrasting elements, Robert Edwards said.

"The arias are performed by organ and voice," he said, "and the overture, marches and battle music are done by the trumpet and organ, so it's quite var-

In addition, the concert will feature works by Bach, Franck, Saint-Saens and Liszt, he said.

Robert Edwards said he encouraged people to attend for a number of reasons.

"People will be able to learn about the tremendous variety of sounds that are available in a fine pipe organ," he said.

"Also," he said, "it will be a chance to hear some extremely difficult music that is very taxing for the musicians. The music we will be playing is very demanding both emotionally and physically."

Bill limits farm subsidy spending

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The House moved Wednesday toward ending Depression-era subsidies for corn, cotton, wheat and other major crops but first fought about more controversial sugar, dairy and peanut programs.

The so-called "Freedom to Farm" bill ends the decades-old system of near limitless spending for major crop subsidies accompanied by government controls on planting. To ease the switch and its effect on land values, the bill gives farmers fixed, declining payments over seven years independent of crop prices.

market, small-government Republicans and urban, consumer-oriented Democrats said the reform plan was seriously marred by failing to dismantle the sugar and peanut programs. Critics said the mosaic of price props, import quotas and production limits raise food costs for consumers and companies that use sugar and peanuts.

The dairy provision faced attacks as anticonsumer because it boosts farmer prices by forcing all milk to be thickened with extra milk solids. The Agriculture Department said the plan would add more than 20 cents to the cost of a gallon of lowfat milk for the next two

It also said the bill would raise more than $1 billion over seven years in the cost of school lunches, food stamps and other government feeding programs. Citing the onset of planting season and the need to act quickly, the House leadership took the unusual step of limiting the number of amendments that could be debated. Once the House bill is passed, House and Senate negotiators must work out differences. The Senate passed its version on Feb. 7 by Core proposals are the same for both bills because they were passed by Congress in the balanced-budget legislation that President Clinton vetoed last year. Since then the Senate added conservation, nutrition, rural development and other segments that raised the cost of the bill but were needed to win Democratic support. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman has recommended a veto in part because the bill ends the old safety net that pays farmers when crop prices fall but not when prices rise. 'Farmers would receive prices payments even if market prices are high," the White House said in a statement.

Both bills would cut farm payments 20 percent over seven years, earmarking $36 billion for growers of corn, other feed grains, cotton, rice and wheat. At the end, Congress would have to decide on what kind of support, if any, farmers should get in the future.

In exchange for less government support, controls over most planting decisions would end, along with requirements that acres be idled. Freed from those controls, backers say, farmers will prosper, planting every free acre and shipping grain the world over to feed.

Since the plan was introduced last August, however, forecasts for crop prices have risen sharply. As a result, farmers will get far more under the plan than they would if subsidies remained tied to prices.

Moreover, despite the "Freedom to Farm" label, growers still will be barred from growing certain crops at risk of losing their payments. Alfalfa, a livestock feed, could not be grown because cattle ranchers say farmers will be encouraged to compete using subsidized feed. Fruits and vegetables would be banned at the urging of growers on non-subsidized land.

Student Senate needs to stand up to Peterson

QUICKread Students who are concerned about the veto of the Lafene bill can call Student Governing Association at 532-6541.

Lafene Health Center is sinking into a dark hole, and it's only going to get darker.

But who cares anyway?

After all it's not worth the money. At least that's what Student Body President Jeff Peterson suggested when he vetoed the Lafene fee increase Tuesday night.

However, Peterson and student senators who voted to sustain the veto are not thinking.

Peterson said there are problems with the service at Lafene. That might be, but there are going to be bigger problems if Lafene doesn't receive proper funding. Services can't improve without money. You can't get something for nothing.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, is obviously going to have to make some sort of cuts in Lafene's services. Whether it's an increase in user fees and prescriptions or a decrease in operation hours and staffing, students will end up being inconvenienced.

Myview

Burdette

Peterson was right when he said the decision senators make on the fee is going to be monumental.

Students who rely on Lafene as their primary health-care provider will remember Senate's decision when they get sick and have to pay for an office visit or dole out extra money for a prescription.

Student Senate has to start from scratch and write a new bill concerning the fee. Let's hope senators take into consideration what students want and how Lafene can improve its services when they draft a new bill.

Senators passed an increase before. All it's going to take is people willing to stand up to the power and sweet talking of the student body president. What are you afraid of, Senate?

something.

Sex is not a game. Yet there are many college students, men and women, who keep their own "impressive" stats about their sexual escapades. Well, these stats may be impressive until you look at the number of errors they have made. Most of us can quote statistics about the dangers of sex like teenage boys rattling off batting averages and ERAs: This percentage of college-age students are sexually active, and that percent number of sexual partners is three or four or 30-something, and we're all going to die of AIDS, or get pregnant or have certain appendages shrivel up and fall off due to sexually transmitted dis-

I hate to think of the day one of my friends comes up to me and tells me he or she is dying of AIDS - statistically, it is not that far-fetched.

Then I began to think about my low batting average and was proud that I have not hit a home run in years. I only wish that was a lifetime average. I wish I could get my virginity back.

It is not just the fact I lost my virginity to someone I did not care about that concerns me. It is not only that AIDS is killing people like the wildfires spreading across the Midwest. It is not just the risk of pregnancy or STDs. It is not about climbing abortion rates or singleparent families, or bringing children into the world when they will automatically have three strikes against them.

Sure, all these things are troubling, but it was my mentality about sex and the mentality of the nation that really bothers me. Sex is too often looked upon as a game.

Sure, it's fun. It's recreational. It burns calories. Practice makes perfect. But how special would a person feel on his or her wedding night upon finding out that he or she was just one notch on the other's helt - just a statistic?

Call me old-fashioned, call me a prude, call me strange, but I would rather ride the pines for now. Especially considering that in 10 years those hitting home runs now will have a pretty good chance of suffering a career-ending

So, if you want to compare sex to a game, I've got a great one for you: Russian roulette.

Attitude a part of self-defense

e were 18 women in wide stances on the grass in front of Anderson and Eisenhower halls, and when we shouted "No!" from the diaphragm, in unison, the 4 p.m. pedestrians were visibly startled.

I must admit this wasn't quite what I'd had in mind when I decided to take the self-defense course offered by the Women's Resource Center. Actually, I was rather skeptical, even a little indignant, about taking such a class. After all, it isn't fair that any woman should have to alter her behavior in the slightest, simply because some men will attempt to assault her, either verbally or physically.

Now, after having completed three of the course's six sessions, I would still maintain no one should have to stop going wherever she wants, whenever she pleases, and with (or without) whomever she chooses. However, I would add most women would benefit by changing how they continue to do the things they like to do. As long as society teaches little girls to be submissive and frightened, the women they become will be doubly vulnerable to assault. Women must first learn to drop the bad habits instilled during girlhood - opting instead for assertiveness and confidence.

One of the first things the two facilitators did as we walked outside was to choose victims from the group. Like the lazy scumbags who assault women, each of them chose a woman who walked meekly, with her eyes downcast as if she weren't aware of her surroundings. Both of their "victims" were surprised they had been chosen. Evidently, they weren't even conscious of this behavior, and I doubt this particular lack of consciousness makes them unique.

But let's say a woman has tackled this obstacle. She has her walk down - looking around, checking things out. The woman has attitude. Unfortunately, none of this changes the fact that she's 5'4" and weighs a buck and a quarter.

"Men are always going to be stronger than you. Always," sai Carrie Beets, senior in sociology and women's studies and course facilitator. "But you have power. You have the power to inflict pain."

I liked that. And all I know is that if some guy grabs me while I'm walking alone at night, I want to be able to hurt him badly enough to allow myself to escape.

As you can imagine then, I was pleased to know how best to use my body's many weapons. I have feet, legs, knees, elbows, fists and a head, all of which could be forcefully applied to strategically-chosen pressure points located on various parts of an attacker's body.

Now I wouldn't want anyone to think self-defense is only about getting physical. It's also about being smart, about trusting one's instincts and about using good sense.

If a woman is walking to her car at night, for example, she can avoid easy hiding places like bushes and construction sites. She can walk with alertness, with her keys ready in hand and with conviction. These mental weapons will serve her far better than the physical ones ever could Hopefully, no woman would ever have to resort to head butts, but let's be realistic. Few and far between are the women who have never experienced some sort of unwanted contact - if not outright assault - at the hands of men. If you are a woman who has been fortunate enough to reach age 19 without having been subjected to this kind of abuse, just wait. It will happen.

When it does, it's empowering to know how you will

So self-defense really does entail making changes in your life, but not as I had initially thought. It doesn't mean giving up things you like to do, such as going to bars or walking at night. It does mean learning to do them wisely. Knowing that you are engaging in an enjoyed activity with the ability to handle any situation that arises may allow you to enjoy it more. I hope women won't deny themselves the added pleasure of confidence in the things they do.

For more information about women and self-defense, contact the Women's Resource Center in Holton 206.

smoking is weight gain. A study of 115,000 women released this past fall stated women who gain between 22 and 40 pounds after the age of 18 are more likely to develop heart disease and breast, uterus and colon cancer.

Men are affected by eating disorders and poor body image, but only about 1 million men are affected as opposed to 7 million women.

Surveys of high school students have shown most boys are eating more and trying to bulk up, while their female peers are trying desperately to lose weight and keep their preadolescent figures.

Why do we do this to ourselves? To what end? How does weighing 115 pounds help me be a better person? My body weight does not make me nicer or more pleasant to be around. I do not get better grades, more friends or money. So what is the

It does not take a doctor to realize none of this is healthy behavior, yet women have actually died from trying to maintain the "perfect body."

Body image is a problem for many women. Quite a few cannot fathorn accepting their bodies, much less loving them and being proud to possess a female form.

While writing this column, I did some research on eating disorders. No one really seems to understand why women go through this.

Certain factors can combine to make a girl more likely to develop an eating disorder than others. Girls who have compulsive or perfectionist personalities are more likely to hate their bodies and try to change them drastically and Dancers and athletes tend to be more prone to developing eating disorders than other groups.

Girls who have been abused sexually or mentally are also more likely to be become anorexic, bulimic or a combination of both.

Teen-agers who have grown up in a family where there was a lot of emphasis on body image and weight are more likely to hurt themselves trying to attain perfection.

A few cite health reasons. Girls try to lose a few pounds and go overboard, or they use dangerous methods like binging and purging.

The study showing weight gain after age 18 increases the risk of heart disease and cancer scares me the most.

I know many girls who have gained weight as they have gotten older. None of them are fat; it is just the result of changing from a teen-ager to an adult.

Yet, I find myself wondering how many women will read that study and subject themselves to unhealthy behaviors in order to keep their weight down. Sort of a vicious cycle.

be more student input. "This is an important enough of an issue and a turning point in how we fund the service. If the increase went through the way it was, it is so many dollars. It is something the students should have a voice in.

Placing the issue on a referendum would require a majority vote by the Students would vote on the issue during the April 9-10 elections, and it would take 60 percent of the student body to approve a fee increase or decrease, Peterson said.

"It increases voter turnout, which is good," Peterson said.

'The highest number of voters we have is always when we have a refer-questions on the ballot. One of the questions could read, "Do you support increasing the student health fee budget from $70 to $83.68?" Peterson said. The other question could read, "Do you support reducing the student health fee from $70 to $0?" Peterson

Peterson said this information would be a helpful way to determine the funding of Lafene.

"If you had 30 to 40 percent of the student body say we want to pay $0 for student health, that sends a strong message, and I think that is what would happen," Peterson said.

If a bill is presented to Senate Thursday for first readings, it will be voted on next week, Peterson said.

"Just like they could put it on referendum, they could decide to write a new bill," he said.

"One of our issues was optional fees. If the service isn't the best they can find anywhere, then they should have the option not to pay for it."

Peterson said he had talked to Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, about implementing a complete user fee.

"He said Lafene would never survive on a complete optional fee basis," Peterson said.

"If we want to do that we might as well get out of the business and privatize it, which I thought sounded like a good idea."

Nearly 80 percent of the health center is subsidized by the privilege fee and 20 percent of the budget is generated by revenue. "If that is where we are heading 10

"I don't think there's any dispute among the student body that we can do better in what we offer students in health care," he said.

The fiscal year ends June 31, and Zweimiller said he was struggling to come up with a budget without any numbers to work with.

"I know that time is marching on, and I have a multi-million dollar health care service that two-thirds of the student body uses with a large staff," Zweimiller said.

"I can't run a ship like this." Peterson said he was not for elimi-

Zweimiller said.

MES, Iowa - Flash back to 1990, K-State senior point guard Steve Henson lit up Hilton Coliseum with 42 points in a 93-90 overtime victory over Iowa State, K-State's last in Now return to Feb. 28, 1996. Senior point guard Elliot Hatcher and sophomore point guard Aaron Swartzendruber combined for 44 points in a 92-87 overtime win over the Cyclones.

It did not come easy for the Wildcats - and at times it looked like it would not come at all. Although K-State (16-9 overall, 7-6 in the Big 8) scored the game's first three points, Iowa State (19-8, 8-5) responded with an 18-4 run that put the Cats down by 11 just 5:11 into the game.

"That scared me," Coach Tom Asbury said. "Then they've got the excitement of the crowd behind them, and it's a good one here."

But Hatcher said the Cats were not afraid.

"It seems like every team does that to us," he said. "We just kept our poise and stayed in the

And they stayed in the game with defense. K-State came out of the first media timeout and put a stranglehold on the Cyclone offense, holding the home team scoreless for 6:09 and taking a fourpoint lead midway through the half.

The remainder of the first half stayed close. With 1.8 seconds left in the period Hatcher hit a pair of free throws to give the Cats a 40-36 advantage at the

While the first half was a series of runs, the second was a classic nail-biter, with 13 lead-changes and five ties. Once again things seemed grim for the Cats down the stretch. A free throw by Cyclones' Kenny Pratt gave Iowa State a five-point lead with 2:38 left in the game.

But the Cats would not be denied. A pair of free throws by senior forward Tyrone Davis and a 3pointer by freshman forward Shawn Rhodes tied the game with 1:39 remaining.

The trey was Rhodes' third of the game and the 11th for the team.

A pair of free throws by each team tied the game at 80-80, giving the Cats the ball in the final minute. But Swartzendruber was called for a charging foul with 25.9 seconds remaining, turning the ball over to Iowa State.

Dedric Willoughby's shot in the final seconds fell short, sending the game into overtime. In the extra period it was all K-State. Davis scored on a free throw just three seconds into the overtime, and a trey by freshman Ayome May gave the Cats a lead they would never surrender.

Iowa State closed to within one, 86-85, on a pair of free throws by Willoughby, but Swartzendruber canned his fifth three-pointer to put the Cats up by four with 1:06 remaining.

K-State hit three of its last four free throws to seal the 92-87 win.

Hatcher and Swartzendruber each finished with 22 points, Rhodes had a career-high 18 points, and

With Davis held to eight points and just one field goal and junior center Gerald Eaker at home with an illness, the Cats went to the outside. K-State recorded just 26 points in the paint and hit a season-high 13 treys for the game.

They play defense a lot different than KU does. They face-guard most of the time, so when you come off a screen, they've got no help," Hatcher said.

"Our guards are pretty good at coming off screens, and when we picked them, we knocked 'em

The 1990 win in Ames sealed an NCAA bid for the Cats. With Wednesday's game marking K-State's first road win over a ranked team, Asbury said he hopes this year's victory will do the same.

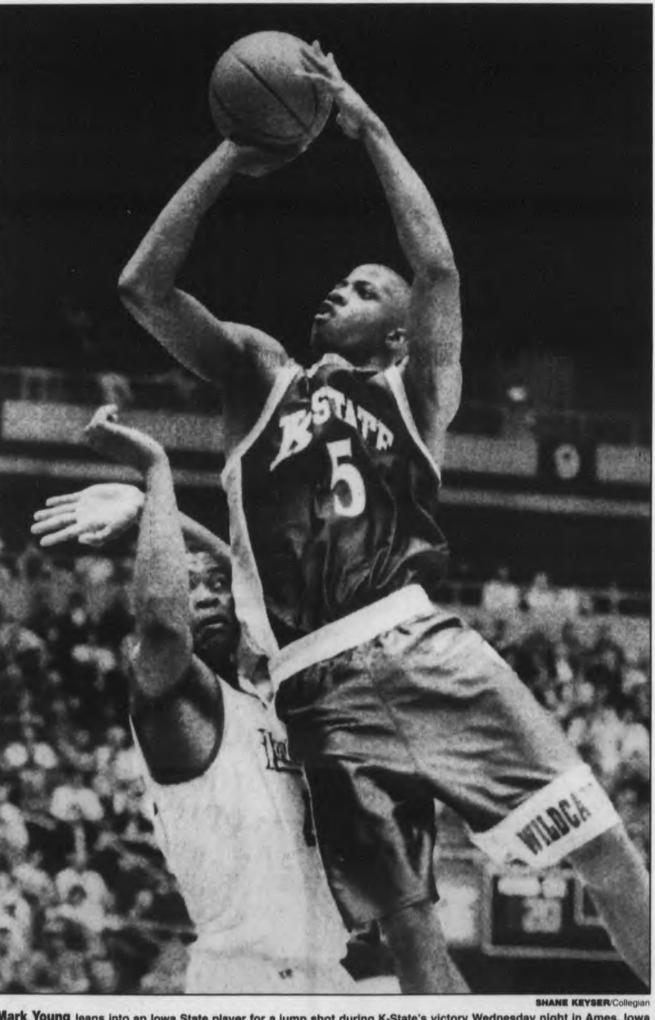

"I hope we are there, but I don't know," he said. "What we've done with this game is give a minimum of .500 (in Big 8 play), but even more important is how we got there.

MES, lowa - They had never started together, but what a combination. Sophomore guard Aaron Swartzendruber and freshman Shawn Rhodes combined for a total of 40 points in the Wildcats' 92-87 overtime victory against the No. 23 Iowa State Cyclones.

It was a homecoming for Swartzendruber, who is from Kalona, Iowa. He said having his family and friends in Ames to cheer him on helped.

"I was really excited just coming back to Iowa," Swartzendruber said. "A lot of people from my hometown were here.'

Swartzendruber said around 40 of his family members and friends made the trip to Ames to see

Rhodes said he was sparked by being a starter for the Cats. It was his second career start at K-

"I got a lot of open looks," Swartzendruber said. "If the looks are there, I'm going to take them.

Swartzendruber said the team knew this was not going to be an easy game.

"We knew we were going to be in for a fight tonight," he said. He was right.

The Cats battled the whole night — and it was Swartzendruber and Rhodes who helped the Cats stay in the game from the beginning. Of the first 17 points scored by the Cats, 12 came at the hands of Swartzendruber and Rhodes

At the half, Swartzendruber had eight points, and Rhodes had seven. With the game tied at 80 and only 25 seconds remaining, the Cats had control of the ball and a chance for the winning shot. But Swartzendruber was called for an offensive foul, and the Cyclones had a shot to win the game. Strong defensive play from the Cats prevented the Cyclones from getting a shot off before the end of regulation. "It was one of those bang-bang plays," Swartzendruber said. "As soon as it went into overtime, I was so happy." Coach Tom Asbury said he was not disappointed with the play by Swartzendruber.

"I'm probably not going to be real upset with Swartzendruber," Asbury said after the game. Asbury said he was also pleased with the performance by Rhodes. Rhodes finished with seven rebounds, one block and two steals. Junior center Gerald Eaker did not make the trip to Ames due to illness, but Asbury said Rhodes would have played anyway. "Shawn would have played a lot even if Gerald would have been here," Asbury said. Eighteen points was a career-high for Rhodes. His previous high was 13 against Colorado.

Swartzendruber's 22 points was his second-best scoring performance ever. His high is 24 points, set a week ago against Missouri.

"It's a great feeling," Rhodes said. "We needed to come out and get some wins. We want to come out and win every game."

With this win the Cats come closer to getting a bid to the NCAA Tournament, something Swartzendruber said the team feels.

"I think our whole team wanted this," Swartzendruber said. "We have that feeling (that they could go to the NCAA Tournament). It would be nice to get a win at Nebraska."

LEAP DAY

Rarest day of every 4 years lacks national recognition, celebration

Every 4 years Leap Day keeps seasons in synch with time Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - It's a day unique among 1,460 others, coming along every four years to keep the passage of time in synch with the earth's seasons. So why isn't Leap Day a bigger deal? It's not a national holiday. It's not a day off work. Good luck finding a greeting card to mark the occasion.

From its inception in 46 B.C. during the reign of Julius Caesar, Feb. 29 has struggled for recognition. For centuries, it wasn't even considered a legitimate day, said folklore expert Joseph P. Goodwin of Ball State University.

"Because the day occurred every four years, it was not considered a legal day. It was an extra day. It was something outside the regular calendar," Goodwin says. "Some people think that's why it came to be called Leap Day - you leap over it."

Until about 300 years ago, no official business was transacted Feb. 29 because the day wasn't considered to have actually occurred and deals would not hold up in court, said Donald Dossey, author of "Holiday Folklore, Phobias, and Fun."

So why haven't labor leaders seized Feb. 29 as an opportunity for the working masses to enjoy a day off? After all, employers would have to grant it only once each four years.

"It didn't have a lot of history to it, no long-term feelings to it as far as workers were concerned," Dossey said. "It didn't have any tradition that workers could hang onto.'

One observance of Feb. 29 is Bachelor's Day, when women were afforded the chance to ask men for their hands in marriage. Legend has it St. Bridget took up the cause with St. Patrick and, in a compromise, he allowed the role reversal to occur once every four years Still, even with the proliferation of occasions to send greeting cards, it's tough finding cards to mark Leap Day, other than special birthday cards.

There's no demand for it," said Hallmark Cards spokeswoman Rachel Bolton in Kansas City, Mo. "You have to ask yourself: What does a day mean to people? With Valentine's Day for example, it is a day to do something, to profess love."

Short of action by Congress or some other arbiter of official days, Leap Day is likely to remain mired in obscurity. "For every holiday that exists," Bolton said, "there was a grassroots movement, that one leader or group was pressing to have."

Peter Morris of Kelowna, British Columbia, may be ready to take up that challenge.

Twelve years ago, while toiling as a marketing director for a shopping center in Edmonton, Alberta, Morris bellyached to colleagues that average workers, unlike bosses and secretaries, have no designated day and labor on with little recognition. "Much like Leap Day itself," he says.

Inspired to fill this gap, Morris created International Underlings Day, observed each Feb. 29.

Until this year, observances have been limited to Morris and his coworkers. This year, however, after winning mention in Chase's 1996 Calendar of Events, a book that catalogs celebrations throughout the year, Morris has been fielding calls from across the continent.

"I don't know what I've started,"

SOLAR ACTIVITY

Vernal equinox points to start of spring

The year is defined as being the interval between two successive passages of the sun through the vernal

Of course, what is really happening is the earth is going around the Sun, but it is easier to understand what is happening by considering the apparent motion of the sun in the sky.

The vernal equinox is the instant when the sun is above the earth's equator while going from the south to the north. It is the time that astronomers take as the definition of the beginning of spring.

The year - as defined above - is called the tropical year, and it is the year length that defines the repetition of the seasons. The length of the tropical year is 365.24219 days.

In 46 B.C. Julius Caesar established the Julian calendar, which was used in the west until 1582.

In the Julian calendar, each year contained 12 months and there were an average of 365.25 days in a year. This was achieved by having three years containing 365 days and one year containing 366 days. In fact the leap years were not correctly inserted until 8 A.D.

The discrepancy between the actual length of the year, 365.24219 days, and the adopted length, 365.25 days, might not seem important but over hundreds of years the difference becomes obvious.

The reason for this is that the seasons, which depend on the date in the tropical year, were getting progressively out of kilter with the calendar date. Pope Gregory XIII, in 1582, instituted the Gregorian calendar, which has been used since then.

The change from the Julian calendar to the Gregorian involved the change of the simple rule for leap years to the more complex one in which century years should only be leap years if they were divisible by 400. For example, 1700, 1800 and 1900 are not leap years, whereas 2000 will be.

The net effect is to make the adopted average length of the year 365.2425 days. The difference between this and the true length will not have a serious effect for many to about three days in 10,000 years.

The adoption of the Gregorian calendar was made in Catholic countries in 1582 with the elimination of 10 days, Oct. 4 being followed by Oct.

The Gregorian calendar also stipulated that the year should start Jan. 1. In non-Catholic countries the change was made later; Britain and her colonies made the change in 1752, when Sept. 2 was followed by Sept. 14, and New Year's Day was changed from March 25 to Jan. 1.

McCain incorporates enjoyment, education

Russell Fortmeyer

College is a time for students to develop an appreciation of diverse artistic styles.

If students only view arts from an entertainment perspective and never take part in a learning process, they will never fully understand artistic process.

As an arts programmer on a university campus, McCain Auditorium not only produces entertainment, it also offers many educational opportunities to students.

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said he asks the performer's representative whether the performer offers demonstrations or master classes. "The next step is to find out if there is a faculty member who is involved with a group of students that might be a good fit with the group," Martin said.

You can bring in movies,

"A faculty member or student could also inquire about bringing a certain type of performer in," he said.

Martin said some promoters advertise their performers as someone who can do things like demonstrations, workshops and classes.

Even if the performers offer learning opportunities, sometimes they do not work well with the learning environment at K-State.

"There are some awfully talented kids on the K-State campus, but it can be that somebody's psychology is such that although they would be good in a performance, they really would not be the best sort of person to run a class or demonstration," he said.

The Cavani String Quartet, who performed at McCain in fall 1995, worked with K-State string students during a residency.

"The Cavani work from about kindergarten all the way up through college because they are teaching at a conservatory," Martin said. "They know there are youngsters at universities who will never be profession-

In Spring 1995, the Actors of the London Stage presented the play "Macbeth" in McCain but also presented classes and lectures in the English and speech departments during the preceding week.

'The fact they would work well with the English department's needs was the prime reason they were brought in," Martin said. Don Hedrick, professor of English and director of cultural studies, said the Actors have visited K-State a total of three times, the first being six to seven years "Originally, the English and theater departments got together and got a grant from the Kansas Humanities Council," Hedrick said.

This grant was coupled with the ticket sales to subsidize the event, he said.

Because the Actors' visit was so successful, McCain decided to produce it on its own, Hedrick said.

Hedrick said opportunities to interact with professionals do not happen everywhere, because most of those privileges are reserved for East and West Coast

"You can bring in movies, but with a live performance, students discover it's a lot more than a classroom assignment," Hedrick said. "They realize they are more involved in education than just tests and assign-

The Alvin Ailey Dance Theater has been booked to perform in McCain in spring 1997. Offered with the performance will also be workshops for dance students. Martin said the Ailey company was a good group to bring to McCain because its residency activities were

"One of the things influencing the decision to bring them in is that we are able to do a2 to 2-1/2 day residency," Martin said.

That means we will see them in the first half of the week, so all the residency activities will have to be on a Monday or Tuesday," he said. "That's good because everyone is in school then." Marci Maullar, managing director of K-State theater, said the Alvin Ailey residency hasn't been made concrete, yet. "We don't work with Martin," Maullar said. "We rely on his choices, and if it's something that appeals to us, we will approach him.'

"He has to go with things that will sell to the public," she said. "He doesn't have any direct support from the University.'

"We can do plays like the 'Lost Formicans' that don't get the biggest audience because we do a big musical to make our money," Maullar said. "He's Luke Kahlich, professor of speech and dance, said there are few opportunities to interact with professionals at McCain. In fall 1994, the dance department had a reception to coincide with the performance of the Principals of the New York City Ballet. "We arranged that ourselves," Kahlich said. Kahlich said nothing has been arranged between the dance department and McCain for the Alvin Ailey company, but they have sent their support. The dance department brings in a professional artist for WinterDance and usually an alumnus for SpringDance, he said.

Kahlich said he "would love more opportunity for interaction." "In the past there has been more interaction," he said. "There was almost always a master class or an informal lecture demonstration so people could talk to "Any contact our students can have with the artist is certainly wonderful," Kahlich said. Although bringing in learning opportunities for students is always a consideration, there are many factors tied to the decision out of the control of the organizers.

'Unfortunately, one of the things that infringes on McCain's ability to have a group that is capable of doing that is the date," Martin said.

Sanctions seek to punish Cuba, remove Fidel Castro from power

WASHINGTON - Rushing to punish Cuba, Congress and President Clinton agreed Wednesday on new sanctions that would bridle foreign investment with the goal of removing

The White House, seeking to avoid a veto, accepted controversial language in a Cuba sanctions bill that will allow American citizens to sue foreign investors who make use of property in Cuba confiscated during the 3-1/2 decades of Castro's rule.

In a compromise, the president is given the authority to waive that right to sue but for no more than six months at a time, when the national interest is involved. White House officials, anxious over the lawsuit provisions that could antagonize U.S. allies, wrestled with Republican lawmakers on the bill's final language but appeared resigned to quick passage.

"The bill's got a lot of problems that we hope can be fixed," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said before the agreement was reached. He said President Clinton "wants to sign that bill now in light of the incident Saturday."

Cuba's shooting down of two small American planes off the Cuban coast Saturday galvanized Congress to complete a Cuba sanctions bill passed in different versions by the House and Senate last fall but held up by administration objections to several controversial provisions

In light of the attack on the planes flown by Cuban American pilots, House and Senate negotiators said they will insist on the tougher House version. It gives Cuban Americans and others the right to sue in the United States foreign companies investing in Cuban property confiscated during Castro's 3-1/2-decade

Last September, the State Department recommended a Clinton veto when the House passed the bill with that provision.

White House and congressional staffers struggled Wednesday to work out a compromise on the lawsuit provision that would give the president authority to waive for a limited period that right to sue.

Also at issue was a provision mandating the State Department to deny a U.S. visa to a foreign company president or other individual who made use of confiscated property.

The United States is the only major Western country that maintains a trade embargo on Cuba. Canada and other countries have voiced displeasure at the idea of unilateral U.S. action to restrict their rights to invest in Cuba. Opponents in Congress say the lawsuit provision also could cause a serious logjam in U.S. courts.

Backers of the bill, which has strong congressional support, insist it could provide the pressure finally to bring down the Castro government. Rep. Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y., chairman of the House International Relations Committee, contended it would "bring an early end to the Castro regime by cutting off capital."

"We are in the very last stages of this confrontation," said Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J. He called for the "purest, hardest and most determined form" of legislation.

Sen, Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he will vote against the bill because it would worsen living conditions for the Cuban people, "alienate our allies and tie the administration's foreign policy hands."

Supporters said the interests of other countries are secondary to driving Castro from power. "The United States cannot continue placing American lives at the hands of foreign interests," said Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla., a Cuban-American representing Miami.

'The United States must stop hiding behind international public opinion and stop wavering on its foreign policy," Ros-Lehtinen said.

The bill urges the president to seek an international embargo against the Castro government and authorizes him to assist democratic oppositionists there.

It bars financial aid by U.S. agencies for any transaction involving U.S. property confiscated by the Cuban government and codifies into law all existing executive orders on the trade embargo to ensure they may not be lifted before a transition government is in place.

It also links U.S. aid to the former Soviet states to their assistance to Cuba and tightens the ban on purchase of sugar products of Cuban ori-

SPEED LIMIT

Senate raises interstate, highway speeds

Associated Press

The TOPEKA Senate Wednesday accepted a conference committee's compromise that would allow drivers to go 70 mph on interstates and 65 mph on improved twolane highways.

The vote was 21-19, the bare minimum for Senate approval.

Opponents said allowing drivers to go 65 on two-lane highways, with a 10 mph "buffer" before speeding tickets would count against their driving record, was far too fast for those roads. However, lawmakers from western Kansas insisted their constituents needed the higher speed for traveling the wide open spaces of the

The measure went to the House for its decision on concurrence, probably later Wednesday.

A House-Senate conference committee agreed Tuesday on the 70 mph speed limit for interstates and 65 on improved two-lane highways, with the 10 mph buffer to allow speeders to avoid having tickets go on their driving record.

Speeds on county highways would remain at 55 mph, although local boards of county commissioners would be allowed to increase those limits to 65.

The Senate had passed a bill that would have increased speed limits on interstates to 70 mph, and on improved two-lane highways to 60 mph, with a 10 mph buffer.

The House version also would have allowed motorists to drive 70 mph on interstates, but would increase the speed limit to 65 mph on two-lane highways with a 5 mph buffer.

The buffer is designed to prevent insurance companies from increasing drivers' rates if they are ticketed for speeding less than the allowed buffer, either 5 or 10 mph.

A new law must be in place by March 8, or the speed limits will revert back to the pre-1974 speed limits. That was the year the federal government imposed a 55 mph limit.

The pre-1974 speed limits were 75 during the daytime on interstates and 70 at night; 70 during the day and 60 at night on two lanes, and 60 for trucks on all highways.

'Words' examines self-discovery, sexual preference

Nikki Prentice

staff reporter

Love, commitment and personal happiness are issues surrounding the characters of "Waiting for the Words," a two-act play written and directed by Deidre Ensz, graduate student in theater.

The play opens tonight and will run through Saturday at the Purple Masque Theatre. Show time is 8 p.m.

The play is centralized around three characters. Rebecca is a 32-year-old university English teacher and has been involved with Josh, 30, for six years.

While Josh is away, Rebecca, a bisexual, becomes involved with a 26-year-old lesbian, Mara.

Josh, who is heterosexual, returns after six months and wants another relationship with Rebecca.

To Josh's surprise, he discovers the reality of Rebecca's three-month relationship with a woman. Rebecca is faced with the decision to keep seeing Mara or rekindle the flame with Josh. Through writing a poem, Rebecca discovers some startling interpretations concerning her work as a poet and life in general.

The poem is a primary factor in the play, Ensz said. Rebecca begins writing the poem before KSU Theatre Josh suddenly comes back, Ensz said. "She works on the poem in bits and pieces, and right before she finishes the poem, she realizes she needs to change her life."

Ensz said the idea for the play stemmed from people in her life and her curiosity about bisexuality. "I've always been intrigued with bisexual life. I think it is impossible to find one person to spend the rest of your life with," Ensz said. Rebecca is portrayed by Vanessa Vaughn, freshman in theater. Her character is someone who is trying to discover what she wants, she said.

'Rebecca is trying to find happiness within herself without any outside help," Vaughn said. "Her whole life she's been controlled, and now she is finally standing up for what she wants.'

Ensz said the show discusses more issues than

"The idea behind the play is love and self-discovery. Love is love, and it doesn't matter what sex you give it to. It's all the same," she said.

Josh is played by Chris Ellner, sophomore in theater. "Josh is an outdoor, rugged-type guy who has a hard time with commitment. He loves Rebecca and wants to marry her, but things are different since Mara," Ellner said.

Sarah Kuhns, freshman in music, portrays Mara. Ensz said the climax of the first act is when Josh discovers Rebecca's relationship with Mara and then asks Rebecca to marry him.

"Josh proposes to Rebecca and refuses (to) leave until she commits," Ensz said.

"Josh thinks Rebecca still loves him, and if he stays she will acknowledge that." The play has a lot of '90s themes, Ellner said.

"I hope the play opens people's minds a little bit about relationships and learn to be more understanding,"

Vaughn said she wants the audience to realize sexuality isn't the main issue of the play.

"The point is you shouldn't be worried about having someone, and just be content with yourself," Vaughn said. "Live life for you, not other people."

Ensz said she intends for the audience to be challenged by the characters and the sexuality preferences. She said Rebecca's conflict is a universal conflict that hits on individual and relationship energies.

"The play will affect male, female, straight and bisexual. I tried hard not to stereotype, and I don't think the play will ring true to just one sexual preference, but all sexual preferences. The play does contain harsh language and adult situations," Ensz said.

Clinton asks to allow late-term abortions for womens' safety

QUICKread

After studying the issue and praying, Clinton said he believes when a woman's health or life are at risk, late-term abortion should be a choice.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Clinton asked Congress Wednesday to amend a bill outlawing a type of lateterm abortion to permit the procedure when a woman's life or health is at

He said he had studied and prayed about it for months.

The measure seeks to outlaw a rare procedure known as an intact dilation and evacuation, which is performed after 20 weeks of gestation and is called by abortion opponents a partial-birth abortion.

The White House has said previously that Clinton would veto the bill in its current form, but it was the first time he personally addressed the con-

"I have studied and prayed about this issue, and about the families who must face this awful choice, for many months," Clinton said in a letter to Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch and other lawmakers.

Responding to Clinton's proposal, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said he was disappointed and urged the president "to rethink your position so that we can stop this brutal and indefensible procedure.

Dole, R-Kan., who is seeking the GOP presidential nomination, wrote Clinton that his argument about the bill "has already lost on the Senate floor and for good reason: This type of abortion procedure takes place over several days and ... as a result, 'health' is simply not an issue."

Pro-life groups said Clinton's proposal would render the bill meaningless. Pro-choice advocates lauded it as an expression of presidential support for a woman's right to choose.

In the procedure, a fetus is partially extracted feet first and its skull is collapsed by suctioning out the brain to make it easier for the fetus to pass through the birth canal.

The procedure "is very disturbing, and I cannot support its use on an elective basis where the abortion is being performed for non-health related reasons and there are equally safe medical procedures available," the president

However, he said, there are rare and tragic circumstances in which the procedure could be needed to save a woman's life or protect her health.

The president wrote that he would support the measure if it were amended to make clear that the ban would not apply if a doctor considered the abortion method "necessary to preserve the life of the woman or avert serious health consequences to the woman."

A pro-life group, the National Right to Life Committee, said the president's proposal would allow such late-term abortions to be performed for depression and other "purely psychological reasons and on healthy underage moth-

The conservative Family Research Council said Clinton's intention to veto the bill "shows his clear disregard for the value of human life."

Helen Alvare, a spokeswoman for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said "We are deeply offended by the president's decision ... It is well known that a 'health' exception is a legal term of art that means any abortion a woman elects to have."

But Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, said "the president is clear in his commitment to choice."

776-5003

She said the legislative ban violates women's constitutional rights because it doesn't make adequate exceptions for protecting a woman's

Jane Johnson, interim president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, said the group "shares President Clinton's confidence in the women of America to make the right decisions even when confronted with the most difficult and tragic dilemmas."

The bill is considered important because it would be the first time since the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion that Congress is voting to ban a particular abortion

"I have always believed that the decision to have an abortion should be between a woman, her conscience, her doctor and her God," the president install a studio learning environment in Ackert 229, which will allow two to four students to use multi-media computer terminals to go through instructor-prepared presentations. The students can then turn around to use a lab bench for lab exercises, Unger said.

Principles of Biology is being redesigned to be taught in the new class-

"Our goal is to enrich the experience we give to the undergraduate at Kansas State University," Brian Spooner, director of the Division of Biology, said.

The new learning environments will help students learn in a variety of "What the technology, in particular the computers and etc., allow me to do, is increase the quality of what I'm able to help them visualize," Ted Schroeder, associate professor in agricultural economics, said.

Schroeder teaches Price Analysis and Forecasting for the Department of Agricultural Economics in Waters The technology enhances his abili-ty to teach, but it doesn't replace traditional teaching methods, Schroeder

"It's not a substitute for good teaching - it's in fact a supplement," Schroeder said.

He said it has made his job more work this semester because he has had to develop new materials using the new technology.

"I know, without a doubt, I'm doing a better job of conveying certain things with this technology," Schroeder said. "If I can use that graphic, and they just remember two more concepts better, and conceptualize them better and see them better because they saw that graphic, then to me alone it's worth the investment."

Schroeder said the vation is important because it increases the quality of the learning experience.

"We're getting more and more to where we only are exposed to students for a very short time. As an instructor, if we don't make that as valuable an exposure as we can, we've wasted their time and ours both," Schroeder

High-tech classrooms

A few K-State classrooms are being remodeled to keep up with the advancements of technology and education. Private donors created the primary funding for the upgrading of the classrooms. Construction bonds, still pending in the Kansas Legislature, will provide some funding.

All the classrooms will contain the same basic equipment:

Members of Habitat slept in the shack for two cold nights to show the K-State student body what it is like to be homeless and not have a decent place to live. "One night of being uncomfortable is nothing compared to what homeless people have to go through night after night," Bettis said. Jennifer Gassmann, junior in social work, said the National Society of Architectural Engineers built the playhouse for Habitat. Tearing down the shack symbolizes the end to poverty housing, and the playhouse symbolizes the new home that Habitat built," she said.

Throughout the next couple months, Habitat will start raffling off the playhouse during the All-University Open House April 13.

"We are going to raffle the playhouse at Open House and hopefully in front of other businesses," Burns said.

She said the specific date of when the playhouse will be won has not been scheduled, but the drawing should take place in mid-April. Boxes resembling piggy banks are being passed out throughout the week and year, allowing students to donate money to Habitat.

"We would like to emphasize that if every student at the University donates $2, Habitat will have enough money to build a house," Burns said.

► K-State Delta Theta chapter of Alpha Jau Omega is responsible for organizing and helping with more than 3,000 hours of community services and events

■ Fraternity members complete more community service hours than any other ATO chapter in U.S.

Three thousand hours equals 125 days. Alpha Tau Omega fraternity members racked up more than 3,000 hours of community service during the 1994-95 school year.

Its work did not escape the attention of the national ATO organization, which recently announced the K-State Delta Theta chapter of ATO won the National Community Awareness Award.

The fraternity's number of hours completed and level of service to the community topped the efforts of 155 other ATO chapters across the country.

They were named national runner-up for the past two years and received honorable mention for the six years before that," said Bill Muir, assistant to the vice president and ATO chapter adviser. Muir said the award was naturally the next step. "I'm really proud that they think community service is an important part of being in the fraternity and the K-State community," Muir said. Gary Cottrell, junior in mechanical engineering, and Russell Taddiken, sophomore in agricultural technology management, were the social service coordinators last year for the fall and spring semesters, respectively.

They were responsible for organizing and recruiting for the 3,000-plus hours of community service that they and their fraternity brothers completed, including two philanthropy events.

The ATO Open, a miniature golf tournament, was the fall event, proceeds from which benefited the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

"The putt-putt tournament was the weekend of the Nebraska game, so we set up a big Cornhusker in the driving range, and the first one to hit it got a prize," Cottrell said.

In the spring, the fraternity sponsored an Ultimate Frisbee tournament, and the money collected was donated to the Children's Miracle

ATO also helped the Flint Hills Breadbasket, the American Cancer Society, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan and the Manhattan Youth

Cottrell said many of the community service hours were focused on children.

PEACE CORPS

Excitement persuades graduates to volunteer

Tom Roesler

Today marks the 35th anniversary of the Peace Corps.

The program, which was started by President Kennedy March 1, 1961, enabled American volunteers to use their education and experience to help developing countries.

Since then, more than 140,000 volunteers have been sent all around the world to help fight illiteracy, hunger, poverty and disease.

More than 1,000 of the volunteers since 1961 have been from Kansas, many coming from K-State. Today, of the 117 volunteers in the Peace Corps from Kansas, 30 of them are from K-"It was an intimate way to learn a new culture, living with and speaking with them," Dave Potter, 1963 graduate in agronomy, said.

Potter served in his term in the country of Chile from 1963 to 1965. Besides learning about new cultures, the relationships that were made by the volunteers during their term was something that many of the K-will always have. Lizette Henry, a Manhattan resident, met her husband, Jeff, while in Sri Lanka serving in the Peace Corps. Jeff graduated from K-State in 1993 with a masters degree in English.

State alumni who served said they

"We like to say we brought back more than our luggage," Henry said. Anita Leverich, a 1987 K-State graduate in English with a masters degree in creative writing, agreed. "It was wonderful. I loved it. The people were friendly, and I made a lot of good friends," Leverich said.

For Leverich, going into the Peace Corps was something she had been interested in since she was 12 years old and saw a commercial about the

"I remember it vividly. It was a bunch of people pulling in nets on a fish farm from Africa," Leverich said.

Excitement, interest and gaining experience are some of the reasons that attract many of the volunteers into the Peace Corps.

"I'd always heard about it growing up," Henry said. "Peace Corps is a good option for all college graduates. It kind of gets their feet wet. It was the best experience I could have chosen, but I don't think it's for everyone."

Potter said he joined for a different

"I thought it sounded exciting and didn't have any pressing plans," he Excitement is something some of the volunteers experience, but it isn't always fun. The excitement Henry and Leverich experienced was being in the middle of a war.

Leverich was teaching literature and English at the National University of Rwanda in the middle of a civil war. Leverich and her husband John Burleson, who graduated from K-State also with a masters in creative writing in 1990, were staying in a part of town that turned into a war zone and were evacuated for their own safe-

After a piñata filled with candy burst, sixth, seventh and eighth graders rush to snag pieces of candy. Members of the Sigma Lambda Beta fraternity and the Sigma Lambda Gamma sorority spoke to students in Phedra Elliott's Spanish classes at Manhattan Catholic Middle School. Members of the fraternity and sorority (below) explain the history of the pinata and other Spanish customs during Elliott's Spanish class. The greeks came to the school to spread cultural awareness.

Storytelling and piñatas were part of the Sigma Lambda Beta and Sigma Lambda Gammas' first community service project.

The presentation was heard by two Spanish classes at Manhattan Catholic Middle School, with students ranging from sixth to eighth grade. Both classes were taught by Phedra Elliott.

Sigma Lambda Beta and Sigma Lambda Gamma are the only two Hispanic greek organizations at K-

"At this age it's hard to teach Spanish grammar, because it's hard enough teaching English grammar," Elliott said. "I think the students need to be interested in the culture before they will become interested in learning the language.

Elliott said it is beneficial for her students to actually see some of the Hispanic culture.

"Our organizations believe it is types about Hispanics. very important to teach children about the different cultures in the world and the United States," said Juan Bayolo, Sigma Lambda Beta community service chairman and senior in pre-veterinary medicine.

Bayolo said the United States is supposed to be the melting pot of society, and by teaching children about the Hispanic culture, it is possible to get rid of negative stereo-

The presentation was given by seven members of the two organizations who focused on the background and the folklore of the piña-

"We decided to teach the kids about the piñata because it's something they can relate to and be interested in learning more about,"

Bayolo told the students the piñata is found primarily in Latin America and more specifically in Mexico and Central America.

'Several theories have been created to explain what the piñata means," Bayolo said.

He said many people believe the piñata symbolizes evil and the struggle between good and evil. Many households in Mexico and Central America create piñatas as a symbol of evil so they can be destroyed. The large amount of candy that falls out of the piñata when it is broken represents the rewards the people will reap for ridding the evil of temptation and greed out of their lives, Bayolo said.

Another explanation of the piñata deals with the creatures or objects that the piñata portrays.

"The indigenous inhabitants of the Americas felt that everything had a soul or spirit," said Katrisha Thomas, Sigma Lambda Gamma dean of pledges and historian, and sophomore in apparel and textile marketing.

Thomas said by destroying the

► PRINCESS DI ANNOUNCES DIVORCE; FINAL SETTLEMENT NOT DECIDED

LONDON (AP) - Everyone expected the fairy tale's sad ending. Princess Diana's announcement that she would agree to divorce was just the final confirmation that the marriage which captivated the world couldn't be saved.

Now come the hard questions: What will happen to the British monarchy and to the beautiful princess who vows she won't go quietly?

It took 34-year-old Diana more than two months to give her husband, Prince Charles, and her mother-in-law, Queen Elizabeth II, the answer they both wanted to hear: She will end her marriage.

But the princess's surprise announcement Wednesday night caught Buckingham Palace off guard, and led to a new round of public feuding. She said her future title had been settled.

The palace said details of the divorce settlement - including her title - have not been decided.

► NASA ATTEMPTS TO SALVAGE EXPERIMENT BEFORE SATELLITE BURNS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - With their lost satellite slinking toward extinction, space shuttle Columbia's astronauts turned their attention to more burning issues Thursday.

Commander Andrew Allen and his crew spent much of the day igniting rubber, wires and a candle in an enclosed chamber to test smoke detectors, as the gap narrowed between Columbia and the escaped satellite-on-a-cord.

The two spacecraft were expected to pass within 50 miles of one another éarly Friday — their closest approach since Sunday, when the electrical cable connecting them snapped.

NASA wasn't sure whether the seven astronauts would be able to see the satellite and its 12 miles of dangling cord, given that Columbia's windows might be facing in the wrong direction and that it might be too dark.

In any event, the crew was instructed to fire Columbia's electron guns so scientists could see whether the tethered satellite detected the ensuing electric and magnetic waves.

To conserve battery power on the satellite, ground controllers turned off all but the most essential systems on the craft for roughly 12

The science instruments on the satellite later were activated so researchers could coax a few remaining bits of data from the satellite, the heart of the $400 million-plus electrical experiment.

Once the satellite batteries die expected to occur soon after the close approach - the Italian craft will become mute.

It will continue to orbit silently until it re-enters the atmosphere and burns up in three to four weeks.

"Some people are attached to the satellite, emotionally. They built it," NASA mission scientist Nobie Stone, said. "But to me, it's kind of like scaffolding on a building. When it's served its purpose, it's not a great loss when it goes away. It served us well."

One bright note: Columbia astronaut Jeffrey Hoffman on Thursday became the first person to spend 1,000 hours aboard orbiting shut-

ASIAN AMERICAN AWARENESS

Events honor heritage

■Troupe highlights month, conveys fresh image on K-State campus

Phil Kellum

staff reporter This month K-State is celebrating Asian American Awareness Month with many new events and exhibits. The highlights will be a speech by Milton Chen, visiting scholar and director of the KQED Center for Education and Lifelong Learning in San Francisco, and a performance by Asian American theatrical troupe Here and Now.

Chen is the keynote speaker for the

The event is being coordinated by Thuy Dang, freshman in chemical engineering.

Dang said she hopes to bring a fresh look to campus and uplift the image K-State presents.

"I wanted to bring events that K-State has not seen or had experience with before. It's great to bring them in and have a different look," she said. Many of the events were chosen by Dang because she has heard about and seen many of them.

She said some members of Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness had seen Here and Now at a conference at the University of Missouri and wanted to bring them to K-State to perform.

They have performed across the country but never at K-State.

There was some conflict because the group performed at the University of Kansas last year in accordance with its Asian American Month celebration and was asked to return this year, Dang said.

Dang said KU didn't want any affiliation with K-State, with performances at both schools.

Other events were scheduled by Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs, and some are co-sponsored by other organizations as well.

In the K-State Student Union, there will be exhibits of Asian fashions and artifacts from most parts of Asia, including Vietnam, Korea, Laos and Japan.

"There are parallels between some of the fashions," Dang said.

The theme for Asian American Awareness Month is "We, As One, Are All That: Unite Our Differences.'

"It's a great opportunity for all Asian groups and Asians to come under one roof, unite differences and come together as one, rather than be left as individuals," Dang said.

Here and Now will perform at 8 p.m. March 14 in the Union Ballroom.

Dang said the group is not like anything K-State has ever seen on stage because they interact with the audience, and it seems like one-to-one interaction

She also said they present themes everyone can associate with.

The troupe usually has more than 20 members, but it will be performing here with only 10.

Dang said she hoped if people could only attend one event during the month, they would go to the Here and Now performance.

Business leader to speak

QUICKread

► Charles Koch, of Koch Industries Inc., will speak on market-based management. Koch's leadership has resulted in a large growth of sales for his company.

One of Kansas' most prominent and successful businessmen is Charles Koch, who is speaking at 10:30 a.m. Monday in Union Forum Hall as part of the College Business Administration's Distinguished Lecture Series.

"The principal reason Mr. Koch was chosen was because he is a premier business leader in Kansas. He has experienced tremendous success since the mid-'60s," said Stan Elsea, acting associate dean of the business department.

Under Koch's leadership, Koch Industries has grown from $177 million in sales in 1966 to more than $20 billion.

Koch Industries Inc. is the secondlargest privately held corporation in the United States and is involved in the oil and gas industry, chemical, agriculture and capital services.

"He has a market-based management philosophy that is a little different approach," Elsea said.

This philosophy emphasizes customer service and reinforces the firm's fundamental values.

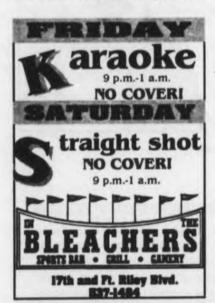

The Business Administration's Distinguished Lecture Series began six years ago in response to the department's desire to expose students to business

The department tries to have at least have one distinguished speaker per semester, Elsea said.

"It started six years ago. We were sitting there and thought that there are a lot of important business leaders that our students need to hear," Elsea said. "Our series is a parallel to the Landon Lecture Series, but more specific for business

In the 1960s and '70s, there seemed to be a growing attitude among young people that businesses are not to be trusted,

'We want to expose not only our students, but anybody, to the people who are business leaders," Elsea said. "If it wasn't for businesses, then we wouldn't be a

The Collegian is sitting on that hard place, watching the rock speed toward us.

We hate to talk about ourselves in stories and editorials. Part of our duty as journalists is to serve our readers, not serve ourselves, as the editors were tempted to do yesterday.

Monday's press run will remain 11,500 papers, instead of the 7,500 we planned.

Why cut the press run? Several reasons.

During the past two years, the cost of newsprint has increased 65 percent. We've tightened our belts as much as we can and have already cut the press run from 14,000 to 11,500. However, the newsprint cost continues to kill us.

Monday, the Board of Student Publications Inc. asked the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee for an increase in our fee, which was voted down. The fee will remain the same unless Senate votes to raise it Tuesday.

Without the increase, we might have to cut the press run to 7,500 papers every day next semester. So the editors decided to show the campus what a reduced press run would be like. We planned a normal delivery to off-campus business locations and reduced delivery to campus and greek t is growing closer to that time when this nation will be called upon to elect its highest officer.

Already we have been subjected to massive media coverage of the race for the Republican nomination for president. My concern, though, is I have yet to hear ideas that I can truly agree with or be inspired by from any of the candidates

As for the Republican candidates, their ideas just plain scare in many cases, they're small and uninspiring. Clinton has also shown he lacks leadership ability and is often only a Republican in disguise. Therefore, I have come up with a list of ideas I would be inspired to hear come out of a candidate's mouth. This candidate would have to be outside of both major parties, because both have become controlled by corporate capital. 1. Getting control back to the people. This could be accomplished in a number of ways, but campaign finance reform would have to be addressed first. Publicly financing elections would be a great first step, with all candidates who get enough signatures receiving equal financing.

Universal voter registration would also be a step forward. There is no reason a qualified person should not use the opportunity to vote.

Alternative political parties should be allowed on the ballot with a minimum amount of hassle. Currently, a number of laws are set up to discourage any but the two major parties.

2. Creation of a sustainable economy. Included in this would be the sustainability of our resources and rural and urban communities.

Unprotected, our natural resources will not hold out forever. It is our duty to future generations to ensure they will inherit a world that is inhabitable. Rural communities are often overlooked by

3. Protecting the rights of citizens. Primarily this includes the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

We must ensure equal access is given to all citizens for education, health care and employment. This means the protection of student loans, a highquality public education system, support of affirmative action and insured rights for immigrants.

The right of people to engage freely in acts that do not infringe upon the rights of others must be reinstituted. This would include the legalization of drugs and the decriminalization of sodomy.

4. Support for democratically run institutions. This would include support for communityowned banks and worker-owned corporations.

There is a great need for banking to be brought back to people and allowed to provide economic stimulus for those denied backing by these institutions. Community-owned banks would provide a system where the primary aim was the benefit of the community and not profit margin.

Worker-owned corporations ensure the needs of the employee will be considered first and not how much profit can be skimmed off. Unions within privately-owned corporations also need

When a candidate finally supports democracy, inalienable rights, sustainability and people is the day I will support a candidate. Until then, I'll have to go on voting for the least evil of the lessers.

AGLER PART OF PROBLEM; WHY HASN'T HE BEEN FIRED?

I am writing this letter to address the situation concerning our women's basketball team. This is a unique group of talented athletes, most of whom are far from home, who have been brought to our fair University to exhibit their talents. Why are they being treated differently than other athletes here?

The focus of my argument lies with two people. First is Athletic Director Max Urick. Sir, you say you investigated this situation? If Coach Brian Agler paid these women, he knows it is wrong. He has coached and played for how long? Yet the administration "creates" a job for him and keeps him here? He is who is paid to know right from wrong, and he screwed up.

In any other situation, he's gone. Did the term lawsuit arise or what? To me, the student athletes are the ones getting the worse end of the deal.

Next, Agler, how can you say this situation is best for the team? I beg to differ. It's best for you; you've been portrayed as a saint in this whole deal. Your method of coaching is so outdated. You brought these women to big-time basketball for what? To show your control, to put them down as people who don't know what they're doing?

I'm sure I'm not the only one who noticed how the players responded to you. They were like scared mice. They didn't know when the next tirade was coming. This is 1996. These are young women who didn't deserve that treatment. They're here because they are exceptional athletes who love basketball, and you robbed them of that.

One final question for Urick: If "the athletes' eligibility was restored" after the forfeits, where does Carlene Mitchell stand? Is this a personal or NCAA suspension? What a way to end your senior season. That would be like you being fired one month before retirement, and you not getting your retirement pay.

In closing, don't let the team members be the last to know - that only suggests a cover up. Be honest with them; they are intelligent human beings. Try to help the student athletes during their time here. Remember, these are the best years of their lives. Be honest with the public, too. We pay your salary, support the teams, and we appreciate honesty.

Good luck against the University of Kansas, ladies.

Editor,

What is the deal with the Brian Agler situation? I'll be the first to admit I am not an expert on the subject. After all, the only information that I have is whatever the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has chosen to comment on in the Collegian.

But let me see if I have it straight.

Supposedly, Agler has been making cash payments to student athletes, violating NCAA impermissible employlaws and extra benefits rules result, the K-State women's basketball team is forced to forfeit the 11 victories it earned while he was coaching. And as his "punishment," Athletic Director Max Urick offers him a front office job in charge of marketing?

That just doesn't make sense to me. It's like saying to a small child, "Well, you shouldn't have stolen that candy bar from the grocery store, but since you have it, do you want me to give you a glass of milk to drink with it?

According to Monday's Collegian, Agler has accepted his new administrative position, claiming to have based his decision on his concern for everyone involved. Is it possible there was no previous position, and the athletic department simply added it to its payroll to keep from having to give Agler his the fuss lateincreasing the athletic fee and ticket prices, having to pay for a new administrative position and hiring a new basketball coach only because the department doesn't feel like firing the person responsible for this situation would certainly be bad publicity.

The worst message of all sent to the athletic community is that the athletic department is a second-class institution, not even having a set of standards its employees are expected to uphold. While at most schools, a coach who causes his team to forfeit everything it worked for would get fired, Agler's actions earn him a promotion here.

Allowing Agler to keep a position in the athletic department is a serious mistake. His salary is another increase in the department costs that is unnecessary and should be cut immediately. Being affiliated with K-State should be a privilege. Based on the information the athletic department has chosen to comment on, it's a privilege Agler doesn't deserve.

lack History Month ended yesterday, but black history didn't.

When the generations that follow ours look back on black history in America, Nation of Islam leaders Malcolm X and Minister Louis Farrakhan will certainly be remembered.

Malcolm X changed his separatist stance after making a hajj (pilgrimage) to Mecca, Saudi Arabia. It was there he realized people of all races were the creations of God, of Allah and could live together in peace as equals. Farrakhan, who has been to Mecca, does not agree with Malcolm X.

The hajj, one of the Five Pillars of Islam, is required of all Muslims who can make the journey. Strangely, the Nation of Islam does not require its members to make a hajj, although it is as important to Islam as baptism is to

The Nation of Islam ignores the Pillars of Islam and openly rejects many fundamental teachings of Islam. The Nation of Islam is not Islamic at all. One of the other Five Pillars of Islam is the shahadah, or the profession of faith in one god, Allah, and in one true prophet and last messenger of Allah named Muhammad. Mainstream Muslims believe Allah can never appear in any physical manifestation

But the Nation of Islam rejects this fundamental Muslim idea by teaching that in 1930 Allah appeared in the person of Wallace D. Fard. The Nation of Islam also teaches that Elijah Muhammed, an early Nation of Islam leader, was the last messenger of Allah who appeared just a few decades ago.

The shahadah concept teaches Muslims that Allah is unseen, is the creator and sustainer of life, that humankind answers to Him alone, and the Prophet Muhammad is an irreplaceable role model.

Yet the Nation of Islam deviates from Islam again in this area. It believes Fard was also a role model for Muslims and the Prophet Muhammad was merely one of many prophets. It believes the true role model for Muslims is Elijah Muhammad.

Another one of the Five Pillars the Nation of Islam rejects is sawm, or daily fasting during the Muslim month of Ramadan, which ended just a few weeks ago. The Nation of Islam only requires fasting during the Christian month of December, and Ramadan fasting is optional.

Zakat, purification tax on wealth accumulated and given to the poor, is another Pillar of Islam. The Nation of Islam rejects it, viewing charity as a way to benefit the dominant classes of the culture.

Muslims are known for their rigorous prayer schedule. They are required to perform the salah five times a day and to do it standing, bowing, prostrate on the floor and sitting. This Pillar of Islam gets watered down by the Nation of Islam, which doesn't require five daily prayers; but when its members do pray, they only have to do it sitting and standing. Orthodox Muslims only use the Qur'an (which they believe was dictated to the Prophet Muhammad by God) as their doctrinal text, as well as the hadith, or early Muslim interpretations of the Qur'an. The Nation of Islam accepts the Qur'an, rejects the hadith except when it suits its agenda, and even believes in the Bible, with certain reservations. The Nation of Islam was assimilated into mainstream Islam after Elijah Muhammad and Fard died. But Farrakhan helped revive the Nation of Islam as It's obvious the Nation of Islam is as separate from Islam as the neo-Nazi Christian movement is from Christianity. So great are the differences that the Institute of Islamic Information and Education has labelled the Nation of Islam "Farrakhanism" and not a part of Islam.

The differences between the separatism preached by Farrakhan and the universal brotherhood taught by Islam is important to bear in mind. By making this distinction, non-Muslims can be more understanding of their Muslim brothers and also help them recognize the courage and wisdom of Malcolm X. During his hajj, he wrote these words: "I could see from this [how Islam eliminated eth-

But the love of the job keeps Eddie Savage, paramedic, and Bill Finn, emergency medical technician, going when times get tough.

"Some of us have been on calls we'd rather not be on," Savage said. "A lot of people are under the impression that people don't die in Manhattan."

Finn said he must be ready to respond to calls at any time during a 24-hour shift. Early mornings and late nights are the hardest for him, he said. "It's a real rewarding field, but it's

The Riley County EMS station appears to have a tranquil atmosphere, but the shriek of an alarm sends adrenaline through the veins of on-call paramedics and EMS workers. They have 60 seconds to get to the door.

"When it rings, everybody knows it," Finn said.

Savage said the first six months working, he couldn't sleep at night. He said the more experience you have, the less nerve-racking the job is. And experience cannot be learned from a textbook.

"It's still unnerving to go on calls you're not sure about," Savage said. The constant change is an interesting thing about the field, Finn said. It is a never-ending process. Savage said sometimes the job can be overwhelming, and they rely on their training and experience.

He said that most of the cases are unique and not by the book.

"The ones you think are routine are not routine," Savage said. Although they don't enjoy seeing people in pain, the EMS workers value the experience they gain from emergencies. "Our business is sick and injured people. Bad trauma is good because we use all our skills. It seems really sick to other people," Lt. Joel Reimer, training officer, said.

One of the first things noticeable around the station is all the joking around they do.

Cats, Huskers to meet in season finale

 Nebraska may hold key to NCAA tourney for K-State

Trevor Grimm

While visions of Big 8 tournaments and NCAA tournaments dance in the heads of K-State basketball fans after Wednesday's win at Iowa State, the Wildcats have to keep their heads focused on what appears to be a less daunting task.

The Cats close out the regular season Sunday when they travel to Lincoln, Neb., to face the Nebraska Cornhuskers, who sit tied with Colorado in the Big 8 cellar after the Huskers' 78-64 loss at the hands of the Buffaloes Wednesday.

But don't expect the Cats to take the Huskers lightly.

Although Nebraska has struggled in the last half of the Big 8 season, it still posts a 15-13 overall record and is capable of being a stumbling block on the way to Kansas City.

Not to mention the importance of having momentum on your side entering next week's Big 8 tourna-

"We have our mind more set," point guard Elliot Hatcher said.

"We know we need these wins." And this one is important. Not only would one more conference win help greatly in K-State's NCAA Tournament bid, but the game has a significant effect on seeding for the Big 8 tournament.

A win at Nebraska assures the Cats of at least a fourth-place finish in the Big 8, with an outside shot at second

If K-State handles the Huskers and Colorado upsets Iowa State, the Cats and Cyclones would finish in a second-place tie at 8-6.

If that happens, K-State would get the second seed by virtue of a season sweep of Iowa State. An Oklahoma win against Kansas would create a three-way tie for second place if the other factors were unchanged.

The Cats are 3-1 this season in games among the three teams, while Oklahoma is 2-2 and Iowa State 1-3, meaning K-State would get the second seed, Oklahoma the third, and Iowa State the fourth.

A K-State loss would drop the Cats to 7-7, which would place them in the midst of the third- through sixth-place logjam in the Big 8 stand-

Several possibilities exist for seeding in this scenario, but no team with a 7-7 record can finish lower than fifth place, as a pair of 6-7 teams, Missouri and Oklahoma State, face each other this weekend in a game that will see the loser finish sixth. Colorado and Nebraska are tied for the seventh seed, while Kansas has wrapped up the top seed.

The Huskers enter Sunday's game led by the tandem of Erick Strickland and Jaron Boone, who combine for more than 29 points per game.

Strickland averages 14.7 points per game, while Boone averages

Twice this season, Kansas has made late comebacks to defeat K-State, including a 66-56 Jayhawk win last Sunday.

It's time for round three.

The Wildcats (14-15, 5-9 in conference play) will face Kansas in the first round of the Big 8 Women's Basketball Tournament at 2 p.m. Saturday in the Salina Bicentennial Center. And this time, K-State might have the advantage.

"We just played them last week, so we're already prepared for them," interim coach Jack Hartman said. "We don't need to do as much work with film, and we know what we're dealing with." Kansas coach Marian Washington agreed the

But Hartman's optimism and Washington's concern have to be tempered by reality - the Jayhawks swept the Cats this year and come into the tournament seeded first after a commanding 11-3 conference record.

K-State administration involved in cover-up

The big news story of the year just came in, and I thought I would be the first to tell y'all about it.

The K-State football team just forfeited each and every one of its games from last season. In the record books, the Wildcats will stand as the worst team in the 1995-96 season. (At least if you do not look up what the little asterisks stand for.)

Is this news to you? Good.

Now, why did it forfeit those games? Why would the K-State program give up its coveted No. 7 ranking? Well, it seems as though Coach Bill Snyder and some of those linemen participated in illegal recruiting practices, but no one really knows for certain. But get this. Although Snyder was relieved of his coaching duties with the Cats, he was reassigned within the University. He will now be involved rebounder, is paramount.

Oh, and those players who were involved? Well, the NCAA excused all of them but one. That one player will be ineligible for all of next season, his senior year.

Does any of this sound familiar to you? Well, it should.

Actually, none of this is true. At least for the football team. (Sorry about using your name, Coach, but I am trying to prove a point here.) Watergate alert! Beware, fellow K-Staters!

Watergate has come to K-State. There is a cover-up much like Watergate happening here on our own campus. But instead of Watergate, or Whitewatergate, we have Aglergate. Yes, folks, there is a cover-up, and as it appears, the University is failing to recognize its participation in the cover-up. The women's basketball coach, Brian Agler, was suspended on Feb. 9, the day of K-State's home contest with Nebraska. Also suspended was senior reserve Carlene truth has had plenty of time to be uncovered and reported.

It has not. In the meantime, former men's basketball coach Jack Hartman has been assigned as interim coach. Senior Night was not really with Mitchell on the bench in street clothes. Agler has been reassigned to the office of the Vice President for Institutional Advancement, and now, with the latest in a string of off-thewall announcements, the athletic department has forfeited 11 of K-State's wins. But there is more reality, and the University has failed to face it. Agler and Mitchell represent the University. They represent me, you and your roommates. But most of all, they represent K-State. I have had numerous reporters from around the country contact me for information about what is going on. The sad thing is, I have nothing to tell them that they do not already know.

Even worse, they ask me questions such as "Doesn't K-State know what it's doing?" or 'What is the school trying to hide?"

That is my question. What is the school try-It is bad public relations. K-State is being given a bad name right now, and it is not because of the actions of a coach and a basket-While Agler's and Mitchell's actions may or may not have been beyond reproach, the

Many people never stop to think about how big America really is.

But to some members of a professional Russian soccer team, Fakel, America is a very big place.

Anton Shepelov, a 22-year-old middle defender, said the size of the country is what struck him most about America.

"Flying into the United States, over Chicago and into Kansas City, it is big," Shepelov said through his interpreter, Mikhail Korenman.

Korenman is a K-State graduate student in education. He is from the same city in Russia the team is from, Voronezh, which is located about 350 miles southeast of Moscow.

Korenman said Fakel, which is Russian for 'torch,' is in Kansas as part of an educational and cultural exchange between the two countries. It is here to train before seasonals start in Russia.

The K-State soccer club will play the Russian team at 2 p.m. Saturday at Anneberg Park. Fakel will then travel to Lawrence for a 2 p.m. contest with the Kansas soccer club, and will return to Manhattan for a game at 6 p.m. Monday with the Fort Riley soccer club at Anneberg Park.

team's vice-president, Alexander Donder, said America is the 32nd country the team has traveled to in its 18 years of existence.

Donder said the team is excited to be here, because there is something new for it to learn.

"First, American soccer is absolutely new for European teams. We don't know how American teams, and American university teams, play soccer," he said. "We want to be more informed and get a bigger picture."

Donder, who spent 15 years as a professional player, said in Russia, soccer is much like the NBA or the NFL, but there is one difference. The players can be found either from high schools where they actually study the sport, or they are recruited, Donder said. "They go to their own boy's school, and we recruit them from there," Donder said. "We also Enc Firzwares travel and buy them from K-STATI SOCCER CLUB around the country."

Shepelov, a fiveyear veteran of the tram, said he was recruited out of high school, where he studied soccer.

"As a young boy, my father used to take me to see games," he said. "In the first grade, I began to practice."

Shepelov said he plays soccer because he's interested in it.

The K-State women's tennis squad will continue its spring dual campaign this Saturday, when it is host to Missouri Valley Conference opponent Tulsa, Okla.

This will be the second Missouri Valley Conference opponent that K-State has met in as many weeks.

Last week, the Cats traveled down to Wichita to take on the Wichita State Shockers. After a convincing 8-1 defeat of the Shockers, the Cats improved their spring season record to 2-1.

It was during last week's dual, where senior Karina Kuregian played her first singles match of the year. Kuregian, who has been recovering from Graves' disease, will once again see action in both singles and doubles.

"She's been getting stronger, and her endurance has been getting a lot better," Coach Steve Bietau said. "She's been looking much stronger in the weight room. She is really showing improvement every day,"

Due to health issues, some of K-State's lineup will be a match-time decision. Question marks for the Cats include Yasmine Osborn, Dinah Watson and Lena Piliptchak.

Gujo karate instructor Tyler Blake warms up by practicing moves before giving a demonstration. Blake and assistant instructor Kirk Ives, senior in art education, will open classes in the martial art form March 6 at the Washington Dance Studio.

Black-, purple-belt instructors to open academy in Manhattan for American Goju karate students arate isn't all just about ninja turtles and flying knuckles. What started as an ancient oriental art form has been self-defense, otherwise known as American Goju karate.

Tyler Blake, a first-degree black belt, and Kirk Ives, a purple belt, are opening the Academy of American Goju Karate at 6 p.m. March 6 at the Washington Dance Studio.

"We decided to teach American Goju karate because it isn't offered in Manhattan, and the closest academy for people to enroll in is the Salina academy," Blake, a Manhattan resident, said. "We're not here to take away from any other form of karate. We just wanted to offer something different."

Classes will be twice a week Wednesday and Friday evenings, and a discount is being offered to K-State students.

"Prices for students showing a valid K-State ID will be $35 a month, and this includes a free uniform," Ives, senior in art education, said. "The price for non-students is $40 a month, and this also includes a free uniform."

The academy also offers a family discount of $60 a month for two people. For those who plan on staying with the class for at least 10 months to work toward a green belt, a special price arrangement can be made.

"Goju Karate originated from the Okinawa style of karate, which started as an ancient oriental art form," Blake said

Blake said this style of karate came to the United States and was Americanized - hence, the name American Goju karate was given.

"Goju means 50-50, and with this form of karate, you use your hands 50 percent of the time and your feet the other 50 percent of the time," Blake said. "This is significant, because most forms of karate are usually 85-15 or 75-25, and you don't use your hands and upper body as much." Blake also pointed out that with American Goju, you learn to use all parts of the body on both the right and the left side.

To help familiarize potential students with American Goju, Ives and Blake are offering the first lesson for free.

"We are doing this because we want our students to be sure they're willing to dedicate their time to the class twice a week," Ives said.

Men and women are both encouraged to give American Goju a try. "I've been wanting to take something like this for a long time," Megan Majerus, senior in elementary education, said.

Majerus said she chose this class because of the great instructors and the special price given to the K-State students.

"I think I'll learn a lot from this class. I will learn to defend myself, while having fun at the same time," Majerus said. Blake and Ives said they are excited about tting their students ready to start working toward testing for their first belt. "We have five different levels of belts," Blake said. "You start with white, and then it goes green, purple, brown and black." It usually takes about one to two months to obtain a white belt in American Goju. "To get your white belt, you have to learn the basic stances, blocks and kicks of Goju,"

"If you show you have learned the basics. you're given the white belt. You then start working toward getting the four stripes needed to test for the green belt," Blake said.

"Before you can test for any belt you have to get the four stripes that are given for forms, self-defense moves, a floor workout and attitude," Ives said. "Once you have obtained the four stripes, you test for the next belt and then start all over again to get four more stripes toward the next belt."

Each time you work for the next four stripes, the level of difficulty increases. "You can go all the way up to an eight-degree black belt," Blake said. Learning to protect oneself is a big part of Goju, and the instructors also want to protect their students.

IVES practices a punching technique during a demonstration in the Washington Dance Studio. The class will cost K-State students $35 per month and will include a free uni-

"We will provide all the gear the students wear while doing any type of physical activity against another student," Ives said.

Students will be required to wear head, hand and feet gear while sparring (light-contact fighting).

"Lower belts can't have contact with the face, but we still want to be sure no one gets hurt," Blake said. Competition is also a big part of American

"We will hold meets with brother Goju schools from Salina and Pratt to start with," Ives said. "You have to be a white belt to attend and will only compete against people of the same belt level."

Trophies and ribbons will be awarded at the tournaments.

This film is a journey into the life of an alcoholic gripped in a terminal struggle with death and addiction, highlighted in episode after episode of binge drinking.

Based on a novel by John O'Brien, Nicolas Cage is perfectly cast as Ben, whose best friend floats in the bottom of a glass. Dismissed from his lucrative job with a company of movie producers, Ben turns to the bottle en force. Ben cashes his severance pay and heads to Vegas, and thus begins the Tale That Wasn't Right. In a city of thieves and drunkards, Vegas accepts him with open arms.

The parallel plot casts the beautiful Elizabeth Shue as Sera, a prostitute whose only life is meaningless sex. She uses Ben as an anchor, attempting to bring a shred of meaning to her life. Such is her desire for this nurturing mionship, she is willing to overlook Ben's reckless

A typical drunkalogue about an alcoholic with a death wish whose plan to drink himself to death intersects with the route of a young hooker, and the two emotional parasites get tangled.

The movie doesn't point a self-righteous finger at the "city of jezebellion" that capitalizes on creating a sophisticated art of various forms of self-destruction, nor does it condemn the horror of such excessive and materialistic behavior by the characters.

Instead, "Leaving Las Vegas" seems to simply play satellite with the camera, orbiting the desperately empty and predictable downward spiral of the lemmings.

Despite such a trite plot, the movie was unexpectedly illuminated by both an almost surreal cinematography accentuated with the paradoxically sensual and melancholy soundtrack, as well as the raw and absorbing acting of Nicolas Cage.

ART EXCHANGE

Exhibit offers fresh, insightful feminist artwork

Russell Fortmeyer

Manhattan Arts Center

This weekend is your last chance to see "Nine of Us," a display of nine women artists from the area showing at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The show, composed of recent and not-so-recent work, is a collaborative exhibit offering a glimpse into the diverse feminist art scene burgeoning in Manhattan. It is rare when one has the chance to see so many wonderful local artists grouped together. Susan Oviatt's colorful watercolors on sewn-paper create numerous patchwork patterns - many resembling classic tile or quilt patterns with a twist of contemporary symbolism. Oviatt's "Exhumed," a sewnpaper coat set against a background of black velvet, has an aura of religious mysticism and a distinct resemblance to artist Anselm Keifer's similar, darker con-

Always a treat for the eye and the funny bone are Ann Carter's witty cartoon creations. Again playing on the theme of quilting and sewn objects, Carter has included her monoprint with a collage, "Agnes Remembers her Grandmother's Quilt."

The work shows senior citizen women strolling leisurely about, hanging quilts in a room that appears to be in a museum - which, perhaps, speaks of the unappreciated artistic qualities of naive quilting.

Literally the lightest work in the show is Jane Beatrice Wegscheider's "Sunflower Dreaming," a gauzy, mesh-fabric construction sewn to form outlines of two people seemingly flying to the ceiling. The bodies are fleshed out with the use of dried sunflowers and seeds. It's a fresh, carefree work and the very sort of piece that has made this show such a delight. The majority of the show will close tonight, with the

When not working with children, ATO members picked up trash along a stretch of highway, collected cans of food for the hungry, served as designated drivers, taught first aid and even pushed cars out of ditches.

"We had that ice storm last February, and all these cars were sliding into the ditch right outside our house, so a bunch of guys went out to help.' Taddiken said.

"There is a right and wrong time to use Goju on someone. You shouldn't take this class if learning to hurt someone is the most important aspect of this class," Blake said

Blake, who started taking American Goju at the age of 9, knows this from experience. "I got into a fight and used what I had learned in my Goju classes to hurt this kid. Little did I know my instructor found out what I had done," Blake said.

Blake's instructor had a talk with him and said he would be suspended from lessons if it ever happened again.

Both of the instructors took American Goju karate lessons from Jim Astle, a second-degree black belt, in St. John.

"We both have a lot of knowledge of American Goju karate, and we are prepared to work hard to help others become familiar with this form of karate," Ives said.

Ives and Blake also plan to expand their knowledge of American Goju.

"We are here to teach, but we will also be learning from our students, and you can't get any better experience than that," Blake said.

Thomas said. "It is then covered with cardboard Greg Gieber, eighth grade student, said. EACH TIME YOU DONATE PLASMA!

CATEGORIES To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for. Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations. Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Eric Reid is a senior in kinesiology and has been employed as a Weight/Fitness Area supervisor since the summer of 1995. Eric not only loves the atmosphere of the weight/fitness area, he also loves the people. "I really enjoy the people I work with and the people I get to socialize with on the job," he said. "I've come to know a lot of people, especially the regulars, and have become really good friends with them." Eric's hobbies include lifting weights and walking his bulldog, Butkis. Following graduation this May, Eric plans to stay in the military and get his commission next fall.

Deanna Zerr is a senior in nutrition and exercise science. Deanna has been employed as an office assistant at Recreational Services for about a year, and she really enjoys the environment the Recreation Complex has to offer. "I love working here because I get to meet and help people and also see my friends," she said. When not working, Deanna enjoys walking and aerobics. Between school and working for Recreational Services, Deanna is also doing her practicum at Manhattan's Women, Infant, and Children Program. Deanna plans to have a career in nutrition counseling after graduation this May.

Swimmers exercise to a different beat. Your heart is a built-in monitor for aerobic exercise. Maintaining your training heart rate for 30 minutes, three times per week, increases oxygen demand, burns fat and improves cardiovascular endurance. To find your training heart rate (THR), subtract your age from 220 (maximum heart rate) and multiply by 75. However, if swimming is your means of aerobic exercise, you must subtract the average 13 beats per minute difference there is between swimmers and runners. Subtract your age plus 13 from 220 and multiply by 75. A swimmer's heart rate may be lower because of the body's horizontal position, the cooling effect of the water, or the heart not having to work as hard against gravity. Swim to a different beat and achieve the same great aerobic exercise benefits.

This month's stroke mechanics workshop will be at 8:30 pm, Wednesday, March 6. Stroke mechanics workshops are facilitated by certified water safety instructors and are for those swimmers interested in workout planning, improving swimming style and increasing stroke efficiency.

Mutrition Notes Exercise has many benefits. It increases metabolism and decreases appetite. Exercise improves quality of sleep and allows your body to use oxygen more efficiently. It increases muscle tone; it decreases the risk of coronary artery disease; and it helps you look and feel better.

This Out

· Fitness Facts Eating breakfast is important for many reasons. While sleeping, the body's metabolism is in a slowed-down state. If a person doesn't eat breakfast, the dy turns to muscle mass (not fat) for energy. This slows the metabolic rate even further. When a person finally does eat, the appetite is really turned on and this could lead to over-eating. Eating breakfast increases your metabolism and allows the body to use calories more efficiently.

Dole turned his attention to the nine states with primaries this week, most of them in the Northeast and most of them considered friendly territory.

Relaxed and upbeat after a clear-cut victory in South Carolina's first-in-the-South primary on Saturday, Dole told cheering supporters at a fairgrounds rally, "We've got a veto coming. We're going to veto President Clinton in President November."

Later, he told a crowd of veterans and their families at an American Legion hall in Towson, Md., "When you choose the nominee of the Republican Party, in my view, you are choosing the next president of United States, because we're going to beat Bill Clinton in November. And I think you want someone there who understands what it's all about in the first place."

Brandeberry Indoor Complex was divided into two sections for the 83rd Annual Cattlemen's Day Friday.

Cattlemen's Day offers the K-State agriculture department a chance to showcase its latest research and allows other cattle industry professionals a chance to learn, make contacts and meet new business associ-

One half of Brandeberry was designated for a speaking forum where various speakers addressed the volatile topics affecting the cattle industry. The other half of Brandeberry was filled with booths.

Gerald Stokka, extension beef veterinarian, began the speeches by discussing processing strategies for stressed calves, and Jim Meetz, president of Kansas Livestock Association, concluded the speeches with a beef

Some booths were set up by feed producers, cattle breeders, farm insurance companies and ranch equipment

Other booths were designed by agriculture professors and graduate Cattlemen's Day offers a chance for some people in the cattle business to get exposure.

The educational exhibits are also designed to benefit those in the cattle

"We want to present research data that can be applied by producers on their farms," said Cliff Lamb, graduate student in animal sciences and industry, who had some of his research on display.

One of Lamb's presentations was "Suckling Effects on Postpartum Anestrus."

His research concluded that a cowcalf bond and milk removal were essential to prolong the period between when a cow gives birth and when she goes into heat the next time.

Lamb said prolonging this period is not good for farmers.

"What you want is a cow to give birth once a year," he said.

Fred Nuefeld, of Nuefeld Farms, has seen the rewards of the research.

"We find the exhibits interesting," he said. "There's always a new twist to things that we've been doing for

"We might find that we've been doing it wrong or reinforce that we've been doing it right," he said.

Nuefeld has two daughters at K-State who said they also find the exhibits interesting. Jennafer Nuefeld, sophomore in agricultural economics, and Liz Nuefeld, freshman in agricultural economics, said the research interests them because they rely on raising their own cattle to help pay for their education.

After a complimentary roast beef lunch, Cattlemen's Day moved to the K-State Beef Research Unit for an open house, where the exhibits allowed for a more interactive approach with the audience.

"The design is to use the facility as an educational tool," Rick Greenwood, graduate student in ruminant nutri-

Greenwood was at the complex to give a hands-on experience concerning the benefits of using different supplements in winter pastures.

He said the exhibitions at the complex allowed a more beneficial learnng process.

We're observing the influence of different supplementations on forage intake," he said.

Other demonstrations at the open house included the traits of winter cereal silages, vitamin E supplementation of beef cows and liver abscesses in feedlot cattle. With the rising cost of booths at Cattlemen's Day, some company representatives said they wonder about the value of the event.

Gordon Albrecht, secretary of the Kansas Hereford Association, said the $200-booth cost was almost too high Discussing questions about flies, Gerald Stokka, extension specialist in beef production, answers visiting ranchers' and farmers' questions about sickness in cattle Friday during K-State's Cattlemen's Day at the Beef Research Unit. The day offered the K-State Department of Agriculture a chance to showcase its latest research and allowed other cattle industry professionals a chance to learn, make contacts and meet new business associates.

Arden Oleen of the Oleen Brothers Ranch raises horned Hereford and black Angus and said he has been coming to Cattlemen's Day at Brandeberry for years.

Oleen said he is also concerned with rising booth costs at the event but realizes the positive aspects.

'We've felt that it's an advantage to

Students should urge senators to vote for an increase

QUICKread

Please call the Student Governing Association at 532-6541 and ask for the name and phone numbers of the senators from your college. Then call and urge them to vote for an increase in the Student Publications

It started in 1898.

A student newspaper was started on campus, called the Student's Herald. Many of the Kansas State Agricultural College students were stockholders in the Student's Herald Publishing Co. For $1 a year, they received the weekly newspaper and were able to vote in editor elections. For eight years, the newspaper published weekly, without problems.

However, in 1906, the newspaper you know today as the Kansas State Collegian almost shut down.

Many students received the paper but didn't pay when the subscription bill came due. Stockholder numbers had dropped. Even though advertising was sold, it was not enough to combat costs. Most of the editors were working for free, as the company didn't have enough money to pay them and the printing bills.

The Collegian faces a similar situation today. Although the circumstances are different, the need is just as real, and the threat to this newspaper is just as dire.

On Feb. 26, the Board of Student Publications Inc. asked the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee for an increase in the Student Publications privilege fee. For various reasons, the request was voted down. The fee will remain the same unless Senate votes to raise it Tuesday.

The request for a raise was not so the editors can be paid more, and it wasn't for anything frivolous. It was because of a situation that newspapers across the country are faced with: the increased cost of newsprint,

During the last two years, the cost of newsprint has risen 65 percent

The Board tried to roll with the punches. The Student Publications Inc. budget was trimmed. We cut down on phone use, travel reimbursement, training, furniture purchases and office supplies. We raised advertising rates, and we cut the press run from 14,000 to 11,500. Our advertising representatives have worked even harder to raise our ad percentage this spring.

But this still isn't enough. If the fee isn't raised to cover the cost of newsprint, we will be forced to cut the press run again this time to 7,500.

Unfortunately, we will be serving less than half the student body on

And here is where the downward spiral emerges. Our advertisers have been more than generous by staying with us this year when we cut the press run. But if we are forced to cut it again, most of the advertisers will not pay the same amount of money to reach less than half the students on campus.

As our advertisers disappear. our papers will get smaller in size, causing more advertisers to pull out. After a while, the Collegian will not survive.

Kind of a scary thought. Yes, you could subscribe to the Kansas City Star or the Topeka Capitol-Journal in the Collegian's place. And you will receive world and national news and precious little about what's happening on campus beyond the exploits of the football and basketball teams.

Beyond news stories, how many of you read the bulletins and announcements to find out club meeting dates? How many don't have televisions and check the Collegian weather forecast? How many of you read this paper for the comics, crosswords, sports, classified ads or just to get mad at the yahoos who write on this page in particular?

We need students' help. We urge you to contact the senators who represent your colleges. Call them and ask them to vote for an increase to the Student Publications fee.

Ninety years ago, the students helped out. Those who owed paid their bills, and many others bought stock in the publishing company. The result is the newspaper you see in front of you

Urge your senator to vote for an increase in the fee, so that 90 years from now the Collegian will still be around.

Thanks to the dork who shot me one people are too stupid to live. We all know at least one of them. I recently had the misfortune to meet another one.

I don't know much about this guy. I don't know his name. I don't know what his particular problem is, and I don't know what happened to make him so stupid.

What I do know about him is that he owns a BB gun and that two Thursdays ago, he shot me with it.

I was just walking along, minding my own business.

He was exercising his God-given right to be stupid, shooting BBs from in or around the fraternity house on the corner of 11th and Fremont streets.

I was hit in the leg. I wasn't injured, but I became unreasonably enraged. "I'm gonna shoot out all their windows," I told Dave, my roommate. "No, man, be cool," he told me, "Don't do that." All of my other friends had been advising me to take violent action against the fraternity and had gleefully suggested different vandalism techniques.

Dave's cooler head prevailed, though. "Just write about it," he told me. "That's got to be almost as much fun as throwing a bowling ball through a window and lots more legal."

What follows is nothing but a heavy stew of invective against my unnamed assailant, lightly spiced with arguments for gun-control.

Like I said, I don't know much about this guy. I don't know for sure if he's a member of that fraternity, although I did see him later, shooting from the house's porch, and I'm reasonably certain that he was shooting from a window when he shot at me. So I came up with a character profile of this dork, purely from imagination: When he was young, he shot small animals (including dogs and cats) just for fun. As he grew older, he never quite grew out of this phase.

shoot people at all, let alone people who are just walking

Any time the subject comes up, he argues strenuously, but stupidly, for lifting the ban on automatic weapons. He will get an automatic weapon if he can and shoot lots of small animals with it, and maybe, someday, in a fit of anger or stupidity, a person.

He's exactly the type of person who should never, under any circumstances, be allowed to have a firearm.

Although many people don't know it, the statistical evidence is clear: There are fewer gun-related deaths when there are fewer guns around.

Statistics also show when guns get used, they are used on the family and friends of the gun-owner, not on intruders. The answer to the problem, then, is clear. We shouldn't let people have guns. The libertarian in me is violently vomiting at that last statement, but this time he's wrong. Sometimes, society just has to decide that, for the common good, some things should be illegal. For example, society has decided people can't have atomic bombs and crack cocaine.

In my imagination, the dorky gunman says, "But the Constitution gives us the right to bear arms."

Actually, it gives a well-ordered militia the right to bear arms. Only the most desperate of militias would let this guy have a gun around them.

Wow, Dave was right. That was almost as much fun as throwing a bowling ball through a window.

Almost.

ant to start a conversation at a Sesame Street taught us about things out of party? Just ask someone who their favorite Sesame Street character is. I guarantee the mere mention of the show will bring a flood of childhood memories into the room.

It is hard to find even one person who doesn't have at least a few fond memories of this hour-long, commercial-free television show. For many of us, it was our first experience with public television. If there is one thing that unites and defines us as a generation and possibly even as a nation, it is Sesame Street. Through its flashy musical numbers, unforgettable characters and fast-paced tempo, this one show has shaped American culture for more than a quarter of a century. And its power is stronger than most people realize.

Sesame Street has influenced us from the time we were toddlers. We have taken the valuable lessons we learned into the world. The reason we as a generation are as environmentally conscious as we are is a direct result of the show. How many of us remember learning how glass was recycled or how to keep our oceans clean from Sesame Street? Oscar the Grouch taught us the value of trash and its many creative uses.

The environment is not the only thing we learned to appreciate. Our perceptions of different races and ages were shaped by Bob, Maria, Gordon, Mr. Hooper and the whole population of this make-believe neighborhood in New York. Muppets of every size and color were welcomed and accepted as equals. Even the language was a source of diversity. As a child, I thought I was bilingual because I could count to 10 and say "danger" in Spanish. I also had a six-word sign language vocabulary, thanks to Linda, the deaf visitor to the block. With those really cool short films, reach for some of us. As a "city kid," I learned milk wasn't made in the back of the grocery store but actually comes from a cow.

I also learned how a postage stamp gets from the drawing board to the envelope in my mailbox. My personal favorite how-to piece is how orange crayons get from a vat of warm wax to the yellow and green box on my desk.

Appreciation of the arts is an important part of Sesame Street's curriculum.

Monsterpiece Theature introduced us to the literary classics, even if the versions we learned from Sesame Street were a bit skewed.

Music is perhaps the most memorable part. The musical repertoire of most people I know is heavily influenced by songs we learned from Ernie, Bert, Kermit and Cookie Monster. We learned to count through catchy tunes and weird, discoesque songs - some of which we can still sing.

All the cool grown-ups like Sesame Street, which is why through the years the cream of society has clamored to make cameo appearances. Everyone who is anyone in American pop culture has been on Sesame Street: Mel Gibson, Robin Williams, Itzak Perlman, Hillary Clinton and Maya Angelou.

Name almost any prominent figure of the last 20 years, and odds are they have appeared with your favorite furry friends. The list of performers includes sports and political figures, actors, musicians and authors.

Sesame Street has been brought to you by the Children's Television Workshop for 26 seasons now. It has been accepted into the homes of millions of children worldwide and more than a few college students right here.

Odds are it will be around when you have children, but you don't have to wait until then to enjoy it again.

PETERSON WAS WRONG; LAFENE QUALITY IS HIGH

I feel the need to respond to recent comments concerning the quality of Lafene Health Center. Student Body President, Jeff Peterson, in his veto of the student health fee increase, indicated the quality of the service was a reason for vetoing the measure. Peterson went on to state the following: "K-State students deserve the best service available. K-State students deserve excellence. If the service is not the best that can be found anywhere, then we should have the option not to pay for it. Our student health center is mediocre at best." I agree with Peterson. Our students deserve the best. Let me set the record straight on the quality issues. Very importantly, the University Counseling Services has just undergone its five-year review by the American Psychological Association to certify that the services' scope and quality warrant designation as an APA Doctoral Interning Training Program. No deficiencies were found. The program was lauded for its quality, and the only concern was funding for the future. Lafene is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Care Organizations (JCAHO). In order to achieve this accreditation, Lafene undergoes an intensive review every three years by an external panel of doctors and health-care administrators. This review encompasses all aspects of the service, including medical protocols, budget, administrative procedures and procedures established to monitor and ensure the quality of patient care. These evaluations are external.

Numerous steps are taken internally to ensure the highest quality in patient and client care. Every patient complaint about either process and/or procedure is reviewed by the Lafene Quality Management Committee. Any needed changes in policies, procedures, protocols, etc. are implemented by the Health Service Administration. Patient surveys are conducted twice yearly.

The Office of Educational Improvement surveys graduating seniors regarding their satisfaction on numerous services and educational programs including the utilization of Lafene Student Health Services. Since 1989, an average of 88 percent of graduating seniors have indicated they utilize Lafene while attending K-State, and an average of 83 percent indicated that they were somewhat satisfied to very satisfied with the level of services received. The graphics of the senior survey results were distributed to student senators and discussed by Mike Lynch during the open period of the Student Senate meeting Feb. 15. Copies were again distributed and noted by Lynch during the Feb. 22 meeting in response to a senator's request for inclusion of the 1995 graduates. Throughout this process the issue has never been quality, but how we can insure present service and quality for the lowest health fee cost.

While each individual is certainly entitled to his or her own opinion regarding the satisfaction with quality of services, the data indicates that to generalize that "our student health center is mediocre at best" is incorrect. I am proud of the professional and support service staff who work in Lafene and the University Counseling Services. It is their objective to offer the highest quality services to the more than 14,000 students who have needed their services on an annual basis.

Robert Krause Vice President for Institutional Advancement

SENATOR VOTED HIS CONSCIENCE ON LAFENE

I would like to take a few moments to respond to your editorial that took exception to Student Body President Jeff Peterson's veto of the Lafene Health Center fee

I was one of the 11 senators who voted against the fee hike bill on Feb. 22. I made it perfectly clear then that I would not vote to further burden students with a large fee hike, especially one that went to a service that already gets too much from students. Every full-time student already pays $70 per semester in a health fee. The vast majority of those students who expressed their opinions to me said they felt the fee was already too high.

I was even more disappointed by the way Lafene is managed financially. There were apparently no adaptations made to cope with the lower level of revenue generated by the lower fee enacted two years ago. This is poor management. It was a letdown to see the Collegian was duped into believing the whining and bellyaching of some involved. Management is the reason for a "struggling" Lafene. This past Tuesday, I voted to sustain the veto. I do not feel that I was cowering from my duty and blindly following an edict from the top. I just agree with Peterson: Students already pay enough. True, a new bill can come forth. I hope that this does occur. But by deriding the vote on the last fee hike, I wonder if you folks at the Collegian are really concerned about student health or are more interested in finally going after Peterson and his beliefs? I feel this University already bleeds the students for too many dollars. With rising tuition, we are already pricing many students out of an education. Some people said a mandatory health tax like the Lafene fee is like insurance to some students. Fine. I would hasten to say it is not insurance. It is an example of a mandated tax on the backs of students. The sad thing is we do not even ask students if they are willing to pay. Well, I say this is not the right approach. If you really care about student well-being, let them decide for themselves if they want to pay all of these fees - I mean, taxes.

Your editorial posed the question, "What are you afraid of, Senate?" I think the question is really, "What are you afraid of, establishment?" I think the students should have more say in how we spend their money.

In a 66-70 loss at seventh-place Nebraska (16-13, 4-10), the Wildcats (16-10, 7-7) found themselves in a fourth-place tie with Oklahoma

With NCAA Tournament hopes on the line, the post-game atmosphere could only be described as painful.

"We didn't play smart enough today. That's the bottom line," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "I take responsibility. I don't think we were as ready as we should have been. We turned the ball over 22 times, and this late in the year, without any full court pressure, that's disastrous."

And disaster is exactly what happened. Nebraska struck first at the 19:47 mark on a jumper by Terrance Badgett. The Cats jumped ahead 11-6 at the 13:16 mark but lost the lead after an 8-0 run by the Huskers, sparked by a layup by Mikki Moore.

The Cats wouldn't see the lead again until the 6:30 mark of the half after a pair of free throws by Tyrone Davis put K-State ahead 24-23. The lead would again change hands with 2:50 remaining in the first half, and the period would end in a see-saw fashion. The Cats went into intermission with the lead, 37-35.

The second half started much the same as the first, with Nebraska scoring just 20 seconds into the period on a jumper by Moore. The lead would change hands five more times before the Huskers took a lead they would never relin-

With a pair of free throws by Tom Wald and dominating dunk by Erick Strickland, the Huskers never looked back, although at times they looked like they might.

Finish unexpected for Cats

It wasn't supposed to work out this way.

K-State wasn't even supposed to be in a position where it was battling for second place in the last weekend of the Big 8 season. But once it got there, the combination of events that led the Wildcats to a fourthplace finish wasn't expected to

The Big 8's upsets started Wednesday night. A K-State upset of Iowa State put the Cats in a position to tie the Cyclones for second place if Colorado would help out with a win at No. 2 Iowa State Saturday. Meanwhile, an Oklahoma State win Wednesday over Oklahoma appeared to eliminate the Sooners from thirdplace contention, as they would likely have to defeat 24-2 Kansas Saturday in Norman to nab the third seed.

An Oklahoma loss would have assured K-State of a thirdplace finish. As it turned out, the Cats would have finished third regardless of how they fared against Nebraska, who had lost nine-straight games heading into Sunday's contest.

If Oklahoma had lost, K-State would have held the tiebreaker under Big 8 rules by virtue of its 2-0 record against lowa

But everything went wrong for the Cats.

First, the Cyclones dashed K-State's second-place hopes with a 74-65 win over Colorado.

K-State sweeps 1st round of Greyhound Classic

In the Greyhound Classic in Jacksonville, Fl., the K-State baseball team won the first four of its seven games of the tournament. With wins against Jacksonville University (11-8), Xavier of Ohio (15-1), Purdue (4-2) and Central Michigan (7-5), the Wildcats improved its record to 9-3. Full coverage of the tournament will be in Tuesday's issue of the Collegian, including the boxscores for games three and four.

► WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Roller-coaster season ends in style

Fate has not been very kind to the K-State women's basketball team this season

Yet in the first round of the final Big 8 Tournament as the No. 8 seed against the No. 1 seed Kansas, one had to think the Wildcats had a chance. But the Jayhawks carried the game with a 70-64 win.

On the first possession of the game, the Cats did not allow the Hawks to even attempt a shot. After a 35-second violation, the Cats could not get a shot to fall.

The second possession of the game proved to be a decisive blow when Tamecka Dixon scored the first bucket of the game, giving the Hawks the lead.

The game was nip-and-tuck for nearly three quarters of the contest. The Cats trailed by only six at eight different times and by four three times. With 11:03 left in the game the Cats capped off a 5-0 run with a Missy Decker three-pointer, pulling them to within one (46-45). The Hawks then battled back with a 9-2 run and built their lead back to 11 with 3:52 left to play.

The Cats fought to within two points with 39 seconds to play (66-64). But that was all the Cats could muster as the Hawks scored four more points to end the contest.

Cats shot 31.4 percent in the game, led by Brit Jacobson's 22 points and Andria Jones' 16.

Hawks shot 39.4 percent in the game and were led by Angie Halbleib's 27 points and Dixon's 12.

Kansas coach Marian Washington said she was proud of her team's effort after sweeping the Cats this season.

"It was a tough game," Washington said. "It was nothing less than we expected. It's tough to beat a team three times in one season and exceptionally difficult to beat a team twice in one week.

"I'm really glad to win the first game of the tournament, but I thought K-State was very competitive. They did a great job the first 10 minutes, and then they started giving up offensive rebounds."

K-State interim coach Jack Hartman had similar praises for his team in the season-ending loss.

"I'm really proud of my team," Hartman said. "We played very hard. You've got to give Kansas credit. They answered every run we made, and that's a mark of a good basketball team. Kansas has the perfect ingredients in a penetrating shooter in Dixon and good size in the interi-

Hartman said the team did a good job defensively but had some trouble offensively. "We missed a lot of makeable shots, and if you're going to win you have to make a good percentage of your makeable shots," he said.

Junior wing Missy Decker said Kansas' lights-out offense and the play of Halbleib was no surprise to her

"Angie (Halbleib) is a great player, and she has been honored for that throughout this season. Their whole team has the capability of being just as good as she was ings but claimed the tiebreaker between the two teams, as the Sooners had the better record against the firstplace team, Kansas.

And nothing went as expected Sunday in Lincoln. Nebraska's leading scorers, Erick Strickland and Jaron Boone, were held to nine points each, but the Huskers still emerged with a 70-66 win. It was junior Mikki Moore who burned the Cats for a career-high 20 points on 8-of-12 shooting.

In the end, K-State's loss at Nebraska didn't change anything as far as the Big 8 standings are concerned. Tied for fourth in the Big 8, the Cats' chances at an NCAA Tournament bid, however, are a differ-

But this was a season that saw few people believing K-State would be in the position of going to the NCAA Tournament. The Cats, coming off an eighth-place finish in the Big 8 last season, were expected by many to finish no better than seventh in the conference. Early in the season, it appeared those predictions might be accurate, as K-State started 3-3, with a narrow win over Emporia State and a 26-point loss at Illinois included in Things started to change after Christmas, as the Cats went to Oakland and knocked off California in its own backyard, 65-58. And after a 4-1 start to the Big 8 season, which included a 17-point win against Iowa State and a road win in Oklahoma, Cat fans were already thinking about the NCAA Tournament.

Six losses in their last nine games have brought the Cats down to earth. Included in the nine-game stretch was a home loss to eighth-place Colorado and Sunday's loss at seventh-place Nebraska, but the Cats also beat second-place Iowa State in Ames and lost two close games to first-place Kansas.

Swartzendruber fouled Tyronn Lue, who made both free shots.

With only 53 seconds remaining, the Cats again found themselves down by six with possession when Hatcher downed a trey to bring the score to 63-66. But with Strickland sinking both free buckets courtesy of a foul by Hatcher, the Huskers pulled ahead by five.

Again, it was Hatcher to the rescue as he found nothing but net from three-point range with 10 seconds remaining. Down by two points, it was not enough as Lue was fouled by Mark Young to ice the game for Nebraska.

A desperation attempt by Hatcher fell short of the basket as the time ran "In all honesty, we beat ourselves," Davis said. "We were playing hard, but we didn't play good. We were doing dumb mistakes. That's something we can't do."

Although Wildcat sophomores Swartzendruber and Young and freshmen Rhodes and Ayome May factored tremendously into K-State's winning combination in recent games, the foursome combined for four of 25 buckets Sunday.

"We didn't come out with the same intensity, and we didn't play well," Swartzendruber said. "I don't know if we were drained or what, but we just didn't come out and play. I got open looks. I just didn't knock them down."

Rhodes said he felt everyone was just not able to find the basket.

"Some of the guys who normally shoot good - including me - just weren't," he said.
